After All—

BY WILLIAM WINTER.

The apples are ripe in the orchard,
The work of the reaper is done,
And the golden woodlands redden
In the blood of the dying sun.

At the cottage door the grandeur
Sits pale in his easy chair,
While the gentle wind of twilight
Plays with his silver hair.

A woman is kneeling beside him,
A fair young head is bent,
In the first wild passion of sorrow,
Against his aged breast.

And far from over the distance
The filtering echoes come
Of the flying blast of trumpet
And the rattling roll of drum.

And the grand-sire speaks in a whisper,—
"The end no man can see;
But we give him to his country,
And we give our prayers to Thee."

The violets star the meadows,
The rose buds fringe the door,
And over the grassy orchard
The pink-white blossoms pour.

But the grand-sire's chair is empty,
The cottage is dark and still—
There's a nameless grave in the battle-field,
And a new one under the hill.

And a pallid, tearless woman
By the cold hearth sits alone,
And the old clock in the corner
Ticks on with steady tone.

Miscellaneous.

Mattie Lee,
OR THE SOLDIER'S COAT.

While stopping at the retired village of D—, situated on the banks of a clear, winding river, far from the noise and bustle of the city—I became acquainted with the heroine of my little sketch, Mattie Lee. She was my favorite, and constant companion. Together we sat by the same window in the tailor's shop, while the long hours away, stitching and chatting merrily. Together we wandered when our task was ended, over the green field, up and down the river's banks, when the wild flowers that bent their fragrant cups to kiss their images in the bright waters were heavy with the dews of evening, and the low music of the moonlit waves was mingled with the good-night: vespers of the wild-birds, that nestled closely together in their downy nests among the glossy leaves; and when night settled around the time-worn boarding-house, we sought the same couch, and it seemed that a purer spirit smiled on me when Mattie was by my side.

She was not a person you would call classically beautiful, but there was a sort of a charm about her features, a sweetness of expression that you could not love. Tresses of clustering brown hair fell over her neck in rich profusion, and beneath her finely arched brows, sparkled such dancing blue eyes, full of fun and mischief, that you forget while gazing into their liquid depths that her nose was decidedly "pug," and her mouth a trifle too large to be pretty. Nevertheless she had a soft melodious voice; a sweet winning smile, that amply repaid for that defect. If she had sorrows, they were locked up in the deep recesses of her heart, for no murmurs ever escaped her lips. She was not only a favorite of mine, but an especial favorite throughout the establishment. If any one had the "blues," one of Mattie's cheerful songs would drive them away, and if any artless sport was wanted one of her mischievous pranks had the desired effect. It was of one of her tricks I was going to tell you, the result of which changed the destiny of her life. Or at least it changed her situation in life. One writer tells us:

"There is a Divinity that shapes our ends, Rough-hew them as we will."

Yet little did Mattie, poor orphaned Mattie dream what was destined for her, as we sat at the shop window one fine morning in June, when the soft air redolent with the perfume of flowers, floated through the open casement, lifting the brown curls from her brow, and danced merrily among the azure folds of a "Soldier's coat" that lay unfinished in her lap.

Thyrza, she said, looking at me, her blue eyes brimful of light and mischief, what do you suppose I am going to do?

Going to work, I carelessly replied,—I should suppose by your thimble and threaded needle.

Yes, yes, she said, I know that, but you know you and I have always worked together on one coat. Now to-day Miss Thyrza, I am going to make a coat all myself, and I am going to write to the soldier that gets it, to write to me, and then we'll see if Mattie cannot have a letter from the army, as well as some other folks.

Why, said I, do you intend to write a letter, and put it into the pocket, and run the risk of its falling into the hands of the "press-man," who will of course laugh at you for your folly.

Of course not Thyrza, she answered, you do not give me credit for what wit I do possess; I am going to write on the back of the ticket, and after it is folded on, who will be any the wiser for it, unless you tell of it; and if you do—she shook her finger defiantly at me, while I bowed my head in silence.

Now she continued, what is the use of our sitting down and looking so gloomy, all of the time, just because people talk so seriously about this war. If I should shed a tear every such I took, it would not save the soldiers one single pang, and if he should chance to find my request on the ticket, and write to me, I see no harm in it. It may be pleasing to him, and I know it would be sport for me. Now tell me truly, do you see any harm in it? and she folded her white hands across her lap and looked so demurely in my face, I could but laugh but to see how credulous she was to expect to ever hear from the coat again.

Only sport, she said, as she resumed her work again, but I fancied by the motion of the little fingers, and the sweet smile that played about her mouth, that she was pleased well with what she called sport, and I doubt not that many a bright vision danced through her brain, for she was not void of romance, more than any other girl of sixteen; and when sunset wore her bowers of gold above the blue hills and distant mountains, whose shadowy summits seemed buried in the richly tinted clouds, Mattie held her coat up before me in the fading sunlight, finished, and I was visionary enough to fancy a fair manly soldier bending over it, and reading the scribbled ticket, that was now firmly felled on the neatly pressed collar.

But my reverie was soon broken by the ringing of a bell that told us our task was ended, and I gladly resigned the costs and all that concerned them for rest. There is nothing very desirable about a life confined to sewing from the time the rosy sun-beams tinge the hill tops until its golden rays cease to give us light.

But yet there are burdens far more grievous to be borne, and after one gets wearied with confinement, they can better appreciate their freedom. I could enjoy moonlit strolls with Mattie, and when we did return to rest, sleep fanned us with his charmed wings, and were bright visions for our spirits, which was ample compensation for our wearied limbs.

But I must confess that I did murmur sometime, and then Mattie would read to me from some of her favorite authors—for she was my comforter at such times. There was one short poem written by Dickens, that was very soothing to my troubled spirit, and knowing there must be some blue people that inhabit tailor's shops, and with those I heartily sympathize. I will here quote it—it may meet with a pleasant reception, and then resume my story.

One by one thy duty waits thee,—
Let thy whole strength go to each;
Let courage dawn on each day,
Learn thou first what these can teach.

"One by one (taught gifts from heaven)
Joy is sent thee here below;
Take them readily when given,
Ready, too, to let them go."

"One by one thy grief shall meet thee—
Do not fear an armed hand;
One will fade as others rest thee,
Shadows passing through the land."

Time passed on without any occurrence to break the quiet routine of our lives, and summer with its robes of dark green, besprinkled with flowers of various dye, had given us a lingering good-bye, as autumn advanced to weave his bowers of crimson and gold, while the winds chanted a weird, wild music, as they whirled the fallen leaves into graceful eddies over the brown hills, and bore them to rest upon the bosom of the bright waters that hurried them onward to the sea, even as our faded hopes float down the river of time to the great ocean of eternity, to brighten no more forever.

I for one had forgotten Mattie's trick, and I hardly think she had taken any serious thought on the subject, when who should surprise us one morning but the little errand boy, with a very neatly written missive for Mattie Lee. I never shall forget how prettily she looked to me when she reached out her hand to receive the letter. A deep flush tinged her fair young cheek, and her soul-lit eyes sparkled with wonder and delight. She grasped me by the hand and hurried me to our room, where, after seating me and kneeling by my side, she opened the sheet and read as follows:

"UNKNOWN FRIEND: As I was the fortunate being that became the possessor of your neatly made coat, with the request that I would 'Please write'—I with much pleasure proceed to the task. I feel at a loss what to write, but deem it will be sufficient for me to tell you if it would be agreeable to you I would like to continue a correspondence so strangely commenced. If you will answer this I will repay you with a long letter giving account of Southern home, camp life, &c.—feeling that I should have an interested reader, in one who wishes so very much to hear from a soldier. Please excuse brevity, and write again, believing me most sincerely, your friend, ALLEN DALONE."

Oh, Thyrza! she said, looking up from the letter. Is not that a pretty letter? Is it not queer? So romantic! so mysterious! I think he must be good, he writes so pretty, and such a sweet name. Now say, Thyrza, would you not write again if you was in my place? And thus the enthusiastic little dreamer ran on until I told her I would; for how could I say otherwise, when she wished me to so very much?

From that day a regular correspondence was kept up between them, which resulted in an exchange of pictures, mutual love, and pledged vows. Mattie's lover proved to be a gentleman of high standing in society, and a prominent member of the army; and when the merry music of the Christmas bells floated on the sharp piercing air, and sunlight rested lightly on the fleecy white mantle that old winter had wound around earth's bosom, Allen Dalone came to bear our Mattie away to his city home—his own little bird. I have had many letters from her, and she is cheerful and happy—never, she writes, having a cause to regret her wild trick of writing to an unknown soldier, who, she adds, I hope will safely return when freedom's banner shall float over the blue hills and peaceful valleys of our glorious Union that is to be.

But if it should be his lot to mingle his bones among the noble slain, I shall be proud to know I possessed the love of one who was self-sacrificing enough to die for our beloved country, and I would fondly hope, if such should be the case, to roam hand in hand with him when my spirit shall cross the dark waters among the flowers and sunshine of my ideal beyond.

Temptations of the Camp.

These words will not reach many who have volunteered to fight for their country, but it will reach some, and more perhaps, of those who will do so at some early future time. It would be a sad result of this war, and a great misfortune, if those who have so nobly stepped forward for their country's defence should after having fought their battles, return to their homes polluted in morals, addicted to liquor, broken down in health by vicious practices, and unfitted to resume the peaceful avocations of life. Removed from home and the restraints of the society of women, with many idle hours to be passed in some way, with monotony to be broken up by all practicable measures, and with a constant desire for excitement, it will be very hard for young men to resist temptation to vicious indulgences in the various ways in which they present themselves to the soldier.

Now it should be the definite aim and determination of every man who enlists in this war to bring his mind and body out of it unpolluted—to return to his home at last, if he is permitted to do so, as pure and healthy as when he left it. Of course we refer simply to degradation and injury self-inflicted. Profanity and obscenity are two of the besetting sins of soldiers, and all heterogeneous collections of men. Let every man determine that no profane or unbecoming word pass his lips while he is away, and that he will discountenance and condemn on the part of those around him to convert the camp into an institution for mutual pollution. Let whiskey alone, except when prescribed by a physician keep the skin clean and healthy as possible, and preserve self-respect on all occasions and under all circumstances.

Indian Character.

Two Sachems of the Western Indians, in making a tour to Philadelphia, dined at the house of a gentleman of fortune, amidst a splendid circle; and observing mustard upon the table, one of them took a spoonful at once into his mouth, which soon caused the tears to run plentifully down his rugged countenance; but collecting himself in a moment, and perhaps no less desirous to conceal his ignorance than to see his companion caught in the same manner; when asked by his brother Sachem the cause of his crying, replied, without hesitation, that it was caused by reflecting upon the goodness of his father who was slain in battle. This answer appeared satisfactory to the inquisitive chief, while the rest of the company, out of tenderness to these unrefined sons of nature, could only, with the utmost exertions, restrain themselves from open laughter. From this moment, the one who had learned by experience the qualities of mustard, kept his eye constantly on his tawny brother of the wilderness, until at length he enjoyed the superlative pleasure of beholding him take a spoonful into his mouth in the same manner he had just done himself, and which was productive of the same effect. The former now in his turn requested of his companion the reason of his shedding tears, and was answered with Indian readiness and wit—Because you was not killed when your father was.

Eleven Rebellions.

Since the organization of the Federal Government eleven attempts have been made to resist its authority. The first was in 1782—a conspiracy of some of the officers of the Federal army to consolidate the thirteen states into one, and confer the supreme power on Washington. The second in 1787, called Shay's insurrection in Massachusetts. The third in 1794, called Whiskey insurrection of Pennsylvania. The fourth in 1814, by the Hartford Convention. The fifth in 1820 on the question of the admission of Missouri to the Union. The sixth was a collision between the legislature of Georgia and the Federal Government, in regard to the lands given to the Creek Indians. The seventh was in 1830, with the Cherokees in Georgia. The eighth was the memorable nullifying ordinance of South Carolina, 1832. The ninth was in 1842, in Rhode Island, between the Suffrage association and the State authorities. The tenth was in 1856, on the part of the Mormons, who resisted the Federal authorities. The eleventh is the present attempt of secession.

Old wood to burn, old books to read, and old friends to converse with.

For the Patriot
Let there be Light.

Let there be light! From the abyss where darkness and impenetrable gloom had held dominion, uprose a scene of wondrous beauty. Flowers of the sweetest perfume sprang up on every side; trees laden with delicious fruits, reared aloft their foliage-crowned heads—while in their branches, birds flitting joyously to and fro, warbled their glad songs of praise and thanksgiving. All was good! All beautiful as good! Would that no dark stain of sin and suffering had ever marred the loveliness of that beauteous home, now so well fitted to afford happiness to the immortal beings for whose habitation it was prepared.

NIGHT! Night in Palestine! Calmly Nature reposes,—calmly as if the iron hand of war had never desolated that fair land,—the appointed home of God's chosen people; calmly as if even now she were not bending beneath the hated sway of a foreign power. And now, lo! in the far East appears a bright, lone star; lone—far among the myriads encircling, it seems to claim companionship with none, but steadily and alone, moves onward, until at last, it remains stationary over Bethlehem—the birth-place of Israel's minstrel king. Ah! well may those who to-night have watched its course, now kneel in humble adoration of the Almighty Father. The veil of moral darkness that has long overhung the world, is now to be raised, and light and peace once more revisit Earth's sad children. Again has been proclaimed the high command: "Let there be light,"—and that bright orb has come, a messenger of "Peace on earth, good-will to men;" for it marks the birth-place of Him at whose name all nations shall yet bow; whose kingdom shall have no end,—the long promised, long-expected Saviour.

Light for the suffering! Light for the weary! Light for those who struggling for some noble end, are almost ready to despair of success; light even for the broken-hearted; there is light and hope for all. Press on! you who are ready to faint, press on! the prize is almost within your reach, and all is possible to a brave and resolute heart. And you, to whom life can no longer afford happiness, because your loved ones have been called from you, to dwell in another home, look up! there is light for you still; not here, perhaps, can joy be yours again—yet strive to walk unshrinkingly in the path of duty, and trust in our Father's love, and soon rest and peace shall be yours—and darkness shall have no end,—the long promised, long-expected Saviour.

The Arab's Gift.

A poor Arab was travelling in the desert, when he met with a spring of clear, sweet, sparkling water. Accustomed as he was to brackish wells, to his simple mind it appeared that such water as this was worthy of a monarch; and filling his leathern bottle from the spring, he determined to go and present it to the caliph himself.

The poor man travelled a considerable distance before he reached the presence of his sovereign, and laid his humble offering at his feet. The caliph did not despise the little gift brought to him with so much trouble. He ordered some of the water to be poured into a cup, drank it, and thanking the Arab with a smile, ordered him to be presented with a reward.

The courtiers around pressed forward, all eager to taste of the wonderful water, but to their surprise, the caliph forbade them to touch even a single drop.

After the poor Arab had quitted the royal presence with a light and joyful heart, the caliph turned to his courtiers, and thus explained the motives of his conduct: "During the travels of the Arab, said he, the water in this leathern bottle had become impure and distasteful. But it was an offering of love, and as such I received it with pleasure. But I well knew that had I suffered another to partake of it, he would not have concealed his disgust; and therefore I forbade you to touch the draught, lest the heart of the poor man should have been wounded."

All that sinners can present to their King is like the water brought by the poor Arab, though, like him, we may fancy it worth the acceptance of our Lord. But he will not reject—he will not despise the little offering of love and faith; for he hath promised that even a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple shall in no wise lose its reward.

Interesting to the Human Race.

Tall men live longer than short ones. The married are longer lived than the single ones, and, above all, those who observe a sober and industrious conduct. Women have more chances of life previous to the age of fifty years than men, but fewer after.

The number of marriages are in proportion of seventy-six to one hundred. Marriages are more frequent after the equinoxes, that is, during the months of June and December. Those born in Spring are generally more robust than others. Births and deaths are more frequent by night than by day.—The number of languages spoken is four thousand and sixty-four. The number of men is about equal to the number of women. The average of human life is thirty-three years. One quarter die before the age of seven; one-half before the age of seventeen. To every thousand persons only one reaches one hundred years, and not more than one in five hundred will reach eighty years. There are on the earth one billion inhabitants. Of these, thirty-four million three hundred and thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three die every year, ninety-one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four die every day, seven thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight every hour, and sixty per minute, or one in every second. These losses are about balanced by an equal number of births.

Life.

Life is no speculative venture with those who feel its value and duties. It has a deeper purpose, and its path becomes distinct and easy in proportion as it is earnestly and faithfully pursued. The rudest or the most refined pursuits, if adapted to the wants and capacities of the pursuer, have a truth, a beauty, and a satisfaction. All ships upon the ocean are not steamers, or packets, but all freight-bearers, fitted to their tasks, and the smallest ship nobly fulfils its mission while it pushes on towards its destined port, nor shifts its course because larger craft career to other points of the compass. Let man right himself upon the ocean of time. Let him learn by trial whether he is by nature a shallow or a ship—a coaster or an ocean cruiser; and then, freighting himself according to his capacity and the market he should seek, find canvas to the breeze, sailing with wind and tide, if they go on his course, but beating resolutely against them if they cross his path. Have a well chosen and defined purpose, pursue it faithfully, and all will be well.

Our Mothers.

Love as we may other women, there stands first and ineffaceable the love of Mother; gaze as we may on other faces, our mother's face is still the fairest; bend as we shall to other influences, still over all, silent but mighty, reaching to us from long gone years, is a mother's influence. The heart may be wayward at the time; fear, entreaty, the silent agony, all in vain; she may sink into her grave despairing; but these are not lost, no prayer, no counsel, no appeal. When tossing oceans separate, and other scenes distract; when years have rolled their steady increase, and care and toil and grief have joined to make the self-reliant man; when the green grass waves about her grave,—then, audible to the soul as when first spoken to the ear, come those neglected words, to strengthen and to save. In the mighty want of his soul, the prodigal hears his mother's voice, her hymn, her prayer, her precept; flashes over him in his riot a vision of her form kneeling by his bed side and teaching his innocence to pray. In upon scenes of sin and shame and license comes that pure, that holy, that all loving presence. The wine cups fall; the tempter is at bay. A little child in spirit, but a giant in a new-found strength, he dashes all away, and goes out to the world with new resolve and hope to contend, not alone, against the perils which had well nigh mastered him. Full many a time, just at the crisis hour,—you have known it,—a long-forgotten word or look—a little waif floating down the tide of years—has borne the periled soul into its safety. Do you remember that toast which was given in the camp of the 20th Massachusetts regiment, last Thanksgiving day, Our Mothers? Did not it, and the response made to it there, and wherever the knowledge of it went, speak, as no eloquence of language could, to the all-prevailing, unquenchable influence of mothers?—Rev. J. F. W. Ware.

Troubled with Humor.

An applicant for exemption on account of physical disability, informed the examining physician that he was troubled with heart disease. The doctor told him to run up and down the stairs leading to his office once or twice. The applicant did this, when the physician after listening to the motions of the heart, said: "You will pass, sir; a dollar, if you please."

"But, doctor," said the man, "let me run down stairs once more, and then try me."

The doctor assented; the man ran down stairs—and forgot to come back.—New-bedford Mercury.

Hingham and Quincy Bridges.

The Commissioners appointed by the Supreme Judicial Court to carry into effect the Act of the last Legislature imposing the heavy burden of these Bridges upon the Counties and the towns have made their report.

The Court had selected for this trust H. W. Paine, D. L. Harris and Lewis Child, Esqrs., gentlemen in every respect qualified to discharge this important duty, and in whom the community could repose the most implicit confidence.

After several days investigation, the Committee report the result, as follows:—

That $16,000 be paid by the Counties of Norfolk and Plymouth, to the Hingham and Quincy Bridge Corporation—three quarters by Norfolk County, and one quarter by Plymouth County.

Thus, the number of Shares being 100, the Stockholders will realize nearly the full par value of their shares.

Having thus extinguished the franchise, at this price, the towns interested become entitled to the use of the structures, and will have the privilege of providing for the repairs.

The condition of these structures may be readily understood.

Testimony adduced before the Commissioners tended to prove that the Bridges had reached that point when entire overhauling or renovation would be necessary, in order to adapt them to public travel.

It was estimated that it would cost about $25,000 were it necessary to build new Bridges. Some evidence was offered that in their present condition these Bridges were worth but little more than the value of the piles.

Others estimated, that the Bridges were worth about one-third the value of new ones.

Others, about two thirds of that value. It was not controverted that the total expenditures of the Corporation for the last twenty years had averaged $1475.00 per annum—of which upwards of a thousand dollars per annum had been expended in repairs of the Road and Bridges, and yet with all this expenditure they had wasted to their present condition.

The Commissioners decreed that the burden of future repairs should be borne as follows:

Quincy,	5 40
Weymouth,	12 40
Cohasset,	4 40
Hingham,	7 40
Scituate,	5 40
South-Scituate,	4 40
Marshfield,	4 40

They also order that the expenses of the award be borne by the counties.

Here then is the result of this unprecedented act of legislation.

The Legislature sequestrated the franchise against the consent, and notwithstanding the remonstrance of the Corporation.

The prediction, that in such case the Corporation would be likely to receive a full indemnity, has been verified.

The Commissioners for the counties remonstrated, also, against this attempt to impose an unnecessary tax of more than $16,000, at this time, upon the people of the Counties.

They also opposed the project of devolving so excessive a burden upon the towns interested, having regard to the dilapidated condition of the Bridges, and the tax that must be paid by these towns, to put the Bridges in tolerable repair, and ever after provide for their maintenance, as well as for the tending of the draws.

They urged, that no public necessity or convenience could justify the imposition of such burdens, as the Bridges were already maintained by the tolls received from persons who saw fit to avail themselves of their use, and the towns and counties were thus relieved from these expenditures.

The manifest inequality of such legislation in this special case, when other Bridges in other sections of the Commonwealth were supported, under like circumstances, by tolls collected under the direction of the Commonwealth, was also apparent.

But the Act finally passed, and here is the result.

Objections made by the County Commissioners, to the validity or Constitutionality of the act are saved, for hearing before the full court.

Those portions of the County of Plymouth which derive so "great benefit," from the expenditures thus made by the citizens of this County, in their special behalf, will not have occasion, certainly, to complain of proportionate expenditure, for the like benefit of other portions of this County.

Whether the Corporation will abide by this decision, or appeal in order to obtain more adequate compensation will probably be decided at the annual meeting of the proprietors on Tuesday next.

A Lunch, (free) to the patrons of the Mariposa Saloon this evening.

People's Caucus.

Pursuant to a call, the People's party, of this town, held on Thursday evening, at the Lyceum Room, a caucus to settle the preliminaries for the fall campaign; it was largely attended, and strongly represented by some of our most solid men. The meeting was organized by the choice of Jeffrey R. Brackett as Chairman, and W. P. F. Meserve, as Secretary.

A Committee of five was appointed by the Chair to report a list of names for Delegates to the several Conventions, consisting of Geo. A. W. Chamberlain, Jonathan Jameson, Joseph G. Brackett, L. G. Horton, and George L. Baxter; who reported the following list, which was unanimously accepted by the meeting:

STATE CONVENTION:

Jeffrey R. Brackett and Wm. Curtis, at large; Noah Cummings, George A. W. Chamberlain, Dr. James A. Stetson, Jonathan Jameson, L. G. Horton, Eleazer Frederick, and George L. Baxter.

COUNCILLOR CONVENTION:

Albert Thayer, and Joseph W. Robertson, at large; I. W. Munroe, Washington M. French, W. S. Perry, Seth Adams, Joseph G. Brackett, A. W. Russell, and C. S. French.

REP. TO CONGRESS—DISTRICT CONVENTION:

Eleazer Adams, and Jacob Eaton, at large; W. P. F. Meserve, Stephen R. Bancroft, Wyman Abercrombie, Daniel Baxter, Dr. William B. Duggan, Francis Williams, and Stephen Morse, Jr.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY CONVENTION:

Geo. A. W. Chamberlain, and Jonathan Jameson, at large; George L. Baxter, Elijah A. Coriass, William S. Perry, Dr. James A. Stetson, Wm. Curtis, Geo. Curtis, and Albert Thayer.

SENATORIAL AND COUNTY CONVENTION:

Jeffrey R. Brackett, and Peter Butler, at large; Geo. A. W. Chamberlain, Geo. S. Baxter, L. G. Horton, Joseph G. Brackett, Jonathan Jameson, Daniel Baxter, and Eleazer Adams.

TOWN COMMITTEE:

Jeffrey R. Brackett, Eleazer Adams, George L. Baxter, L. G. Horton, Jonathan Jameson, Francis Williams, and Wm. Curtis. On motion of Noah Cummings, the Secretary was requested to notify each Delegate of their appointment.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS. A Democratic Caucus will be held this evening at the Lyceum Room, in this town, for the choice of Delegates to the several Conventions, now near at hand. This great National party is reorganizing all over the country, to take part in the grand struggle for a restoration of those principles, in the coming elections which uphold the Union. Let every friend of his country be on hand.

ACCIDENT. As Mr. Richard Billings, of "The Farmers," was passing through our village yesterday morning, in an open wagon, his horse, when opposite the Town House, got entangled in the harness, and in his struggles to clear himself, struck Mr. B. on the right leg, breaking it below the knee. Dr. Gilbert dressed the wounded limb.

DEATH OF HON. B. F. HALLET. Hon. B. F. Hallet, died at his residence, in Boston, on Tuesday last, after a long illness. The deceased was born in Barnstable, Dec. 2, 1797, and was in the 66th year of his age. He had long been in public affairs, and enjoyed the entire confidence of the Democratic party, of which he was a prominent member.

QUINCY QUOTA. The whole number of soldiers required of this town is 415. There has already been sent a much larger amount of men than our quota, if we count in those who have enlisted from other towns and who belong to Quincy.

VOLUNTEERS AND REGULARS. An old army officer gives the reason why the regulars endure more fatigue than volunteers. When marching, if the regular even cuts his finger he falls into the rear and appears a burden. The moment he halts for the night, after he eats his rations, his cheek is upon his knapsack and himself in the land of dreams. The volunteer does very differently. If he hurts himself he extemporizes some inadequate sort of dressing and keeps along.—When night comes, the chances are ten to one that instead of taking repose at once he wears himself still further by sleep frog with his companions, or by playing "old sledge" for pots of whiskey. The regular carries with him nothing that he can help. Not an ounce more will he bear than regulation weight. The volunteer is apt to leave nothing behind him that he can carry. Every day he carries even the weight of a knapsack in a manner that none but those who carry them can adequately understand. In Mexico, soldiers threw away money because it chafed their pockets.

HEAVY CONTRACT. The Seneca Falls, (N. Y.) Courier says that the Seneca Knitting Mills established in that village has recently contracted with the United States Government to furnish seven hundred thousand pairs of stockings for the army, and daily turn out eight thousand pairs toward fulfilling the contract. About three hundred persons are employed as operatives, and from three to four thousand women and girls are furnished with work at their homes in the surrounding country and in distant places.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 2, 1862.

President Lincoln's recent Proclamations continue a great mental ailment with the press and in private circles. The last one virtually declaring martial law over the whole country; suspending the writ of Habeas Corpus, and placing the entire population under a stringent rule, whereby freedom of the press and of speech is suppressed, is regarded by some with favor as a military necessity, while others so boldly oppose it as to render them liable at any moment to an involuntary visit to the shades of Fort Warren. The Emancipation Proclamation of 22d ult., is roughly handled by a portion of the public press, and highly extolled by another and the greater portion. It is argued from high authorities that emancipation can rightfully be used as a war power. And it resolves itself logically into a great Constitutional question, how far the Executive at the head of the nation has that power.

He certainly has large prerogatives to execute the laws and suppress rebellion, and in any legitimate exercise of the Federal Constitution he should be sustained. For as loyalists, we are all of one mind and heart to sustain, protect and defend the Union, at whatever sacrifice, against its enemies. It is our sacred duty to preserve that glorious empire of equality and freedom which was transmitted to us and baptized by our Fathers in sufferings and blood. In one sense, the Proclamation can be regarded as harmless; its provisions not going into effect for ninety days; giving ample time for reflection as to its results. If upon mature examination the President has been found to have transcended his constitutional powers—if as has been stated, not one slave is likely to be made free by this edict—if it extinguishes a love of unionism in the Border States—if it will add three hundred thousand rebel soldiers to the rebellion; in short, if it is proved to be a military power independent of, and over the Constitution, the President, we doubt not, will repeat it before the dawn of New Year's day. Meanwhile, many State elections are to come off, and Congress will convene, from which public sentiment on the Proclamation will be largely elicited.

In the absence of sensation telegrams from Washington, the week past, in our community, has been comparatively quiet. Notwithstanding the dull weather, Boston wears a lively appearance. Large numbers of its solid citizens have returned from their temporary sojourn in the rural districts.

The lecture season, for which the "literary emporium" is famous, is about to commence, and the theatre-going community will find strong attractions. The Internal Revenue Law is slowly merging into operation—but it is rather hard to start its machinery, and it will require some practice before the law will work easy. It slightly embarrasses business operations, and at the best, will never receive large favor from the public.

Obituary.

Hopes have been entertained that Henry A. Holden, of Co. A, 13th Massachusetts Volunteers, who was reported mortally wounded and left on the field at the second Bull Run battle, August 30, was still alive, but on Saturday last his friends received positive information of his death from a member of the same Regiment, who lay wounded beside him under a tree, where they were taken after the battle, and where Henry lived until Wednesday morning, September 3, when he peacefully passed from the toils and privations of a soldier's life to the rest above.

He was a young man of uncommon purity of character, and his manly and dignified manners will long be remembered by those who enjoyed his acquaintance. He died at the early age of twenty years and four months, beloved by all who knew him, and especially by his companions in arms, with whom he had passed through more than a year of hard service as had fallen to the lot of any of our Regiments, suffering the many privations without a murmur, and always having a cheering word for the most trying circumstances.

TWO SUMTERS. An erroneous idea has obtained currency to the effect that the United States steamer gun boat Sumter is the rebel craft of that name. There are two Sumters. One is now in European waters, well watched by the United States steamer Kearsarge; the other is a little Federal gun boat of four hundred tons burthen, carrying four guns and one hundred men, and is attached to the North Atlantic Blockading Squadron. She was once one of Cronwell's ships, but was chartered by the United States government for Commissioner Bowling's Paraguay expedition. These two vessels are alike, and if the rebel one should escape, and the Union craft be seen off Holyhead, there is little doubt that the latter would be mistaken for the privateer. But Mr. Welles has taken care that they shall sail in different waters.

The New York Herald says that it is stated on good authority, that Gen. Burnside was offered the command of the army of the Potomac, but in declining the honor he asserted the pre-eminent fitness of Gen. McClellan for the position.

Sad Intelligence.

The following sad letter was received by the wife of Sergeant Chas. W. Carver, from Mr. L. G. Graff, of Philadelphia, (Penn.) who on visiting the battlefield and noticing our brave and wounded townsman in a helpless condition, took pity upon him, (although an entire stranger), and acted the Good Samaritan. We learn that Mr. Carver was nobly leading the Company on to battle, at the time he received his wound; all his superior officers being sick or on furlough.

Sharpsburg, (Md.) Sept. 24, 1862.

DEAR MADAM,—In visiting the late battlefield and churches now occupied for Hospitals, I found many a noble man and soldier, suffering severely from terrible wounds received in the battle. Among the rest, I found a noble looking man severely wounded in the breast by a ball. In speaking to him, he requested I should make known to you the facts in his case. He was wounded on Saturday the 20th; his wound is a very painful one. In speaking to him, of his hope in Christ, he gave me to believe, that should it be the will of the Lord to take him away, that he will meet you and his dear son and daughter in a better land. I fear his wound is mortal; yet in all his suffering he is cheerful and happy in God, and only has one wish, which is that he might die among his loved ones at home. I made him as comfortable as possible; among the thousands of the wounded it is impossible to provide for them as he would be at home. Away from the Railroad, and in a country village, the accommodations are very limited, yet the ladies and visitors are very kind, and do all they can.

I am very respectfully, your friend,
L. G. GRAFF.

P. S.—Sept. 26 I have been with your husband these two days, there is no change either way. His brother gives him constant attention, and he is as comfortable as circumstances admit; his recovery is however doubtful, as the wound is directly through the right lung.

For the Patriot

The Adams Literary Association.

To the Publisher of the Patriot:

THE ADAMS LITERARY ASSOCIATION held their Annual Meeting for the choice of officers on Monday evening, September 29. The balloting resulted in the choice of the following named gentlemen.

President—L. P. Forbush.
Vice President—Edward Brackett.
Secretary—James H. Mundy.
Assistant Secretary—George Randall.
Treasurer—Henry F. Barker.
Librarian—William P. Barker.

The meeting was very well attended, and a very harmonious spirit prevailed. The Association finds itself in prosperous circumstances, it has a good Library, a very good Membership, and a fine sum of money in the Treasury.

Several of the active Members of last year are now to be found in the Federal army. The former general Secretary, Mr. Uriel Josephus, is marching along with Uncle Sam's nine months' men, and George Barker, Samuel Nightingale, and the gallant Lieutenant Sheen, and the jovial Lieutenant Porter, were recently all working Members of this Association. While we miss their familiar faces we rejoice that the Association can furnish so good material for both officers and men, and we cherish the proud confidence that when these brothers of ours are put to the fiery trial they will not be found wanting.

The meetings of the Association are always open to the public, and all interested in the discussion of the current topics of the day, whether social, moral, political or religious, are cordially welcome.

A few young men of the right sort will be admitted to Membership upon application. The next regular meeting will take place on Monday evening, October 13, at half-past seven o'clock.

Next Sabbath morning, (to-morrow) Rev. Edward P. Thwing, of the Orthodox Church of this town, will preach a discourse appropriate to the death of Henry A. Holden, late member of the 13th Massachusetts Regiment.

The rebels admit their loss to be 20,000 since they entered Maryland. The Alabama brigade, commanded by Col. Corning, acting Brigadier General, has not been able to muster 50 men since the battle.

A Free Lunch to all visitors of the Hancock Saloon this evening.

E. H. Heywood, Esq., the eloquent reformer will lecture to-morrow.
Subject in the morning, "Inspiration," and in the afternoon, "The People."
Quincy, Oct. 4

GEN. NELSON. This officer who had distinguished himself in several battles with the rebels was shot at the Galt House, in Louisville, by Gen. Jefferson C. Davis. Nelson was very violent in his language and abusive to Davis, and struck him, whereupon Davis indignant at such treatment, put a pistol ball through him. If the newspaper accounts of Gen. Nelson's conduct are true, and all of them coincide, he had lived long enough, although his mode of exit was not strictly legitimate.

Summary of Intelligence.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

John A. Washington, who was shot while in arms against his country shortly after the rebellion broke out, sent nearly the whole of the $150,000 in gold which he received for the Mount Vernon estate, to Chicago, where it was invested in houses and lots. This large property has not been confiscated, but it ought to be.

The Gas Company in Philadelphia will not raise the price to consumers in consequence of the Government tax, but will pay the levy out of their profits.

Near Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, a woman, named Hinken, having no laudanum in the house, and desiring to give her child a sleeping dose, steeped a poppy-head, and gave the tea sweetened as syrup. The child very readily went to sleep, but woke no more. It was dead.

When Virginia voted herself out of the Union there was but one loyal paper printed in the State and that was the Wheeling Times. Now there are fourteen loyal papers in Virginia.

The wife of Gen. Lee, the rebel commander-in-chief, writes to a friend that her husband has shed tears of blood over this terrible civil war.

The Manchester N. H. Mirror says that Amos H. Gerry of that city has an apple tree that has blossomed four times this year, and produced fruit from three of its blossoming. Its last floral exhibition can now be seen, along with the matured fruit of the first.

A Havana letter says that the famous diamond wedding as many predicted, has turned out badly, and that Mrs. Oviedo is at Havana, separated from her husband. A formal separation has been agreed upon, the lady to receive $4000 per annum, and to live in the United States. She has had a sorry time of it with the Cuban graybeard.

A railway has been built in New Zealand about 14 miles in length, rising in that distance 2800 feet.

W. Y. Dennis, State Agent of Indiana, who has just returned from Washington at Sharpsburg, says that the great want of the soldiers is blankets, unless a supply is speedily furnished, great suffering and sickness must result.

The Jews of Chicago held a meeting on the 13th ult., and resolved to raise an Israelite company for the war. Those present subscribed eight thousand dollars to help along enlistments.

Of 335 towns in Massachusetts, only 193 sent delegates to the late Worcester Convention.

Dr. Zacharie, of New York, is organizing a corps of chiropodists for the army. He is to have twenty-five assistants, who will be controlled by certain rules and regulations, as in a department.

The Manchester American has learned, by conversation with several farmers recently, that the potato crop is not remarkably large this year, and what is worse, in many localities there are indications of rot. Some fields which have been dug show a large per cent. of decayed tubers.

Tea is sixteen dollars a pound in Petersburg Va., calico a dollar and a half a yard, and U. S. treasury notes selling at 75 per cent premium.

Machias, Maine, has done well. Recently nine children were born in the town, which is exactly the quota required of it under the nine months call.

It appears that the rebels have a great antipathy to Zouaves, and that no soldier wearing their dress and taken prisoner has been paroled.

The shipment of ore, this year, from the Lake Superior region, will amount to 100,000 tons.

A correspondent of the Exeter News Letter says that a Baptist deacon down in Maine, in less than fifteen months, buried one wife, married a second, was divorced from her, and married the third. Who will dispute our being a fast people down here.

Mr. Josiah Conant, of Gardner, lost a cow last week by death, and upon examination a twelve penny nail, three inches and a quarter in length was found in her heart. It entered at one side and worked its way through, so that it came out on the opposite side, making a hole through the heart larger than a man's finger.

It is understood that the Union losses in killed, wounded and missing, at the late battles in Maryland and the Potomac, are estimated at the War Office as not exceeding sixteen thousand. Some regiments were almost entirely cut up.

Rosin a year and a half ago, brought a dollar and a half a barrel. It is now worth twenty dollars a barrel.

The wages of the printers of Paris have just been raised, a circumstance which is regarded as indicative of a speedy advance in the wages of other workmen.

Better Late than Never

Life is a race where some succeed,
While others are beginning;
'Tis luck at times, (i) others speed,
That gives an early winning.
But if you chance to fall behind,
Ne'er slacken your endeavor;
But keep this wholesome truth in mind,
" 'Tis better late than never."

If you can keep ahead, 'tis well,
But never trip your neighbor;
'Tis noble when you can excel
By honest patient labor;
But if you are outstripped at last,
Press on as bold as ever;
Remember, though you are surpassed,
" 'Tis better late than never."

Ne'er labor for an idle boast,
Of victory or another;
But while you strive your utmost,
Deal fairly with a brother.
Where'er your station, do your best
And hold your purpose ever,
And if you fail to beat the rest,
" 'Tis better late than never."

Choose well the path in which you run,
Succeed by noble daring;
Then, though the last, when once 'tis won,
Your crown is worth the wearing.
Then never fret if left behind,
Nor slacken your endeavor,
But ever keep this truth in mind—
" 'Tis better late than never."

Our Secret Drawer.

There is a secret drawer in every heart,
Wherein we lay our treasures one by one;
Each dear remembrance of the buried past;
Each cherished relic of the time that's gone.

The old delights of childhood long ago;
The things we loved, because we know them best;
The first discovered primrose in our path;
The cuckoo's earliest note; the robin's nest;

The merry hay-makings around our home;
Our rambles in the summer woods and lanes;
The story told beside the winter fire;
While the wind moaned across the window panes;

The golden dreams we dreamt in after years;
Those magic visions of our young romances;
The sunny nooks, the fountains and the flowers;
Glimpses of the fairy landscape of our youth;

The link which bound us later still to one
Who fills a corner in our life to-day,
Whom whose love we dare not dream how dark
The rest would seem, if it were gone away;

The song that thrilled our souls with joy;
The gentle word that unexpected came;
The gift we prized, because the thought was kind;
The thousand, thousand things that have no name.

All these in some far hidden secret lie,
Within the mystery of that secret drawer,
Whose magic springs, though stranger hands
May touch, yet none may gaze upon its guarded store.

How Out Your Row.

One day a lazy farmer's boy
Was loitering out his corn,
And merrily had listened long
To hear the dinner horn.

The welcome blast was heard at last,
And down he dropped his hoe;
But the good man shouted in his ear—
"My boy hoe out your row!"

Although a "hard one" was his row,
To use a ploughman's phrase,
The lad, as saviors have it,
Beginning well to "haze."

"I can," said he, and manfully
He seized again his hoe;
And the good man smiled to see
The boy hoe out his row.

The lad his task remembered,
And proved the usual well,
That perseverance to the end
At last will nobly tell.

Take courage, man; resolve you can,
And strike a vigorous blow;
In life's great field of varied toil,
Always hoe out your row.

Anecdotes.

What did you give for that horse, Jim?
Five hundred dollars.
He's a very dear horse. Did you give the cash?
No—my note.
Then he is very cheap.

An Irishman, angling in the rain, was observed to keep his line under the arch of the bridge, upon being asked the reason he gave this answer:
"To be sure, the fish will be after crowding there, in order to keep out of the wet."

A woman offering to sign a deed, the judge asked her whether her husband compelled her to sign.
He compel me! said the lady; no, nor twenty like him.

An Irishman who was wounded in one of the Virginia battles, while lying helpless on the field, a wounded man near him set up a terrible howl.
Shure what are ye making such a devil of a noise about? says Pat; do you think nobody's killed but yourself.

You're a pretty fellow, said the owner of a wood pile to a thief, to come here and steal my wood while I sleep.
Yes, replied the thief, and I suppose you would stay up there and see me break my back with lifting, before you would offer to come down and help me.

An Irish auctioneer, puffing off a pair of earrings to a company of ladies, said that they were just the sort of articles he himself would purchase for his wife, where also a widow.

THE SPECIFIC PILL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR
Spermatorrhea, or Seminal Weakness, and Genital Irritability in either sex.
This Malady, the terrible consequences of which are too well known to require more than a bare allusion to them, is one of the most insidious, and therefore dangerous of all the long catalogue of human ills. It saps the very springs of Life, rapidly undermines the constitution, and sinks the unhappy victim into imbecility and a permanent grave! From one to six boxes of the SPECIFIC PILL are sufficient to effect a permanent cure in the most Advanced Cases, whether Constitutional, or arising from Abuse or Excesses.
MEDICAL TESTIMONY.
I believe it to be, in the treatment of Spermatorrhea, as near a SPECIFIC as any medicine can be.—B. Keith, M. D. [Am. Jour. of Medical Science.]
I have found them all that could be desired.—Their effect has been Truly Wonderful! I used them in a case of Spermatorrhea of long standing, which has been under treatment for years. I think three boxes will complete the cure.—E. P. Dickes, M. D.
This is not a Homoeopathic Remedy, nor is there any mercury or other deleterious ingredient combined with it.
PRICE:—1 oz. Box, Six Boxes for $5, by mail, prepaid. For sale by all respectable Druggists, and at the Sole General Depot in the United States, by J. WINCHESTER,

Try it Again.

Come hear what the bird on the hickory sings,
Whose nest was blown off by a fortnight ago;
In a new one, as soft, she is folding her wings,
And a new love is perched on the branches below.

Come hear what she says to the heart of the poor,
Whose temples have fallen in wind and in rain;
Come, hear how she sings a new song that is sure,
To the glorious old carol of—Try me again.

What has been badly done cannot perish too soon;
What has been rightly done will not perish at all;
One work towers at even, and one totters at noon;
And we know not their worth till they triumph or fall.

I know it is hard to be toiling so long,
I know it is bitter to struggle in vain,
To be broken by sorrow, and buffed by wrong,
But the duty of life is to—Try it again.

Not a hand on the earth but has labor and task;
Not a heart on the earth but has duty to do;
Success lies on merit whenever we ask,
And fear not that God will be tender and true.

And still, when we falter and fall in the race,
Or the wreck of our hopes scatters over the plain,
Remember to look with a pitying face
On the work of our brother and—Try it again.

Particular kinds of good and evil, like particular kinds of vegetables, are continually dying out, and now once take their place. Providence varies the modes of instruction and discipline more than the amount.

Every art is best taught by example; good deeds are productive of good fruits.

The rebel armies can't get a good view of anything, for they are not able to find a stand point.

Tell me, then mighty deep, with waves so blue and clear, is there a good true coming, when hoops will disappear? Some foreign, rock-bound shore, some island far away, where these outrageous street balloons shall all be stowed away? The mighty deep was rippled by a squall, and answered sadly, none at all.

A Maine editor thus distinguishes between different sorts of patriots: Some esteem it sweet to die for one's country; others regard it sweeter to live for one's country; and yet others hold it sweeter to live on one's country.

For the Patriot

The Death Bridal.

BY CARRIE.

And you will meet me to-night, Maggie? Yes Arthur, I promise, replied the young girl; but her voice trembled as she spoke, and tears dimmed her eyes.

The young soldier knelt for an instant, with chivalric courtesy at the feet of the girl—then rising, he hurried away—while his companion more slowly retraced her steps to her home.

Maggie Evelyn was the only daughter of a farmer of considerable property, and of most decided union feelings. His two elder sons had enlisted among the first in their native town. Forgetting that all Southerners were not also enemies to their country, he had noticed with displeasure his daughter's intimacy with Captain Stanley, a young Louisiana, who had been spending a short time in their neighborhood; and in spite of the young girl's protestations, he had change to Maggie Evelyn in her quiet home.

Letters came often; ever breathing of love and love—and except when tidings came of engagements between the Northern and Southern armies, Maggie seemed almost as in former days. At such times, though her cheek grew pale as she read, and for a few days her form drooped, a letter assuring her of Stanley's safety, soon removed her depression. But at length, the arrival of letters ceased; and though she hoped and trusted long, she was at last forced to the conclusion that she was forgotten. Her step grew slow and languid—and it was days passed, her large eyes took a strange, wild look, and she seemed to shrink from the notice even of her parents; and when suddenly addressed, a deep flush sometimes rose to her brow—but instantly succeeded by a death-like pallor.

Her parents vainly attempted to discover the cause of their daughter's suffering. She evaded all of their kind enquiries, and they began to fear that they must look forward to her early death. But more terrible even than such a stroke was the blow soon to fall upon them.

It was morning—bright and beautiful without, but within the once happy home of the Evelyns all was darkness and gloom; for Maggie, the light of that home, the pride and darling of her parents' hearts had fled, they knew not whither. In her room they found a letter addressed to her parents, and with almost breaking hearts they read the lines she had traced—the record of a story, alas! too often told. She confessed her disobedience, but implored them, for the love they had borne their child, to forgive the sorrow she had brought upon them. The letter ended with these words: And now dear parents, farewell. Pity and forgive your erring child, and pray for her that she may one day be permitted to meet you in a happier home.

All search was vain, though continued long. Gladly would her parents have taken their child to their hearts, and relieved her suffering by their love and care—but it might not be. Only the relief of prayer was left them, and earnestly they prayed that their lost child might be guided in her wanderings, and brought at last, into the Saviour's fold.

And Stanley, where was he? Had he indeed forgotten his affianced bride? Had he proved periant to the vows he had pledged? We shall see.

Away low to the "sunny South," that flowery land of poetry and beauty. Bright and beauteous was the scene outspread before the view. Trees laden with the richest of tropical fruits, tempt the beholder. Flowers of the sweetest perfume fill the air with their fragrance, and birds of the gayest plumage charm the ear with their melodious notes. Surely this fair land, this almost paradise, must be as happy a home as it is fair. Alas! even here the stain of sin, and the gloom of suffering have reached. Hark! what was that strange, distant sound, borne by the air to the listener's ear? It cannot be the rumbling of thunder. No, it is the cannon's roar, bringing tidings of some battle-field, where brothers against brothers are contending in mortal strife. And now, as the scene of conflict is approaching, the rattle of musketry mingled with the roar of the cannon, while the shouts of the combatants and the cries of the wounded and dying swell the fearful chorus! Alas! that man should thus employ the powers that God has given.

Terrible and long continued was the struggle; victory sometimes inclining to one and then the other side. Night at length put an end to the scene of carnage—but it could not end the sufferings of those who, early wounded, had lain through all that fearful day upon the blood stained ground, unable to aid their comrades, and tortured by thoughts of distant homes they never might behold—and of sorrowing sisters, or weeping wives and mothers, who would long hope and look for those whose life-blood was ebbing away upon that field.

Alone, upon that dreary plain, wandered a woman clad in the dress of a "sister of charity." Sometimes, with eager glance, she bent over some prostrate form, then turning with a sigh of disappointment, she passed on with hasty steps. Now and then she paused to place a cordial to the lips of some suffering soldier, yet scarcely heeding the murmured blessing which followed her. At length the light of the torch she held flashed upon the pallid face of a youthful soldier, dressed in the uniform of a Federal officer, but whose countenance betokened his Southern birth. A careless observer would have believed that life had already departed, but with a faint cry of mingled pain and joy, the woman knelt beside him and raised his head in her arms. His eyes unclosed, and for an instant were fixed upon her with a look of eager hope, which, as he observed her dress, changed to one of sadness.

Months passed away—at first with little change to Maggie Evelyn in her quiet home. Letters came often; ever breathing of love and love—and except when tidings came of engagements between the Northern and Southern armies, Maggie seemed almost as in former days. At such times, though her cheek grew pale as she read, and for a few days her form drooped, a letter assuring her of Stanley's safety, soon removed her depression. Alas! that man should thus employ the powers that God has given.

Terrible and long continued was the struggle; victory sometimes inclining to one and then the other side. Night at length put an end to the scene of carnage—but it could not end the sufferings of those who, early wounded, had lain through all that fearful day upon the blood stained ground, unable to aid their comrades, and tortured by thoughts of distant homes they never might behold—and of sorrowing sisters, or weeping wives and mothers, who would long hope and look for those whose life-blood was ebbing away upon that field.

Alone, upon that dreary plain, wandered a woman clad in the dress of a "sister of charity." Sometimes, with eager glance, she bent over some prostrate form, then turning with a sigh of disappointment, she passed on with hasty steps. Now and then she paused to place a cordial to the lips of some suffering soldier, yet scarcely heeding the murmured blessing which followed her. At length the light of the torch she held flashed upon the pallid face of a youthful soldier, dressed in the uniform of a Federal officer, but whose countenance betokened his Southern birth. A careless observer would have believed that life had already departed, but with a faint cry of mingled pain and joy, the woman knelt beside him and raised his head in her arms. His eyes unclosed, and for an instant were fixed upon her with a look of eager hope, which, as he observed her dress, changed to one of sadness.

Months passed away—at first with little

change to Maggie Evelyn in her quiet home. Letters came often; ever breathing of love and love—and except when tidings came of engagements between the Northern and Southern armies, Maggie seemed almost as in former days. At such times, though her cheek grew pale as she read, and for a few days her form drooped, a letter assuring her of Stanley's safety, soon removed her depression. But at length, the arrival of letters ceased; and though she hoped and trusted long, she was at last forced to the conclusion that she was forgotten. Her step grew slow and languid—and it was days passed, her large eyes took a strange, wild look, and she seemed to shrink from the notice even of her parents; and when suddenly addressed, a deep flush sometimes rose to her brow—but instantly succeeded by a death-like pallor.

Her parents vainly attempted to discover the cause of their daughter's suffering. She evaded all of their kind enquiries, and they began to fear that they must look forward to her early death. But more terrible even than such a stroke was the blow soon to fall upon them.

It was morning—bright and beautiful without, but within the once happy home of the Evelyns all was darkness and gloom; for Maggie, the light of that home, the pride and darling of her parents' hearts had fled, they knew not whither. In her room they found a letter addressed to her parents, and with almost breaking hearts they read the lines she had traced—the record of a story, alas! too often told. She confessed her disobedience, but implored them, for the love they had borne their child, to forgive the sorrow she had brought upon them. The letter ended with these words: And now dear parents, farewell. Pity and forgive your erring child, and pray for her that she may one day be permitted to meet you in a happier home.

And Stanley, where was he? Had he indeed forgotten his affianced bride? Had he proved periant to the vows he had pledged? We shall see.

Away low to the "sunny South," that flowery land of poetry and beauty. Bright and beauteous was the scene outspread before the view. Trees laden with the richest of tropical fruits, tempt the beholder. Flowers of the sweetest perfume fill the air with their fragrance, and birds of the gayest plumage charm the ear with their melodious notes. Surely this fair land, this almost paradise, must be as happy a home as it is fair. Alas! even here the stain of sin, and the gloom of suffering have reached. Hark! what was that strange, distant sound, borne by the air to the listener's ear? It cannot be the rumbling of thunder. No, it is the cannon's roar, bringing tidings of some battle-field, where brothers against brothers are contending in mortal strife. And now, as the scene of conflict is approaching, the rattle of musketry mingled with the roar of the cannon, while the shouts of the combatants and the cries of the wounded and dying swell the fearful chorus! Alas! that man should thus employ the powers that God has given.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Oct. 11th, 1862.

"Born to no Master, of no Sect are we."

A NARROW ESCAPE. A little girl seven years of age, only child of Mr. Dennis Mulgrim, of this town, came near losing her life while returning from the Coddington Intermediate school, on Wednesday afternoon. It appears that an unruly cow, belonging to Josiah Quincy, Jr., was drove by the school-house about the time the school was let out, accompanied by her calf, which was carried in a wagon. The quadruped feeling a sense of danger, natural to animals having young, chased several of the children, but they all escaped except this one who had her clothing badly torn, and was thrown to the ground insensible. She was immediately removed to the residence of Mr. Eliza Turner and Dr. Gilbert called, who dressed her wounds; and we are happy to say she is rapidly recovering.

COMMISSIONED. We learn that Joseph W. Morton, son of Wm. S. Morton, Esq., of this town, has been promoted to 1st Lieutenant of the Second Massachusetts Cavalry. This young gentleman enlisted in the army as a private, and has steadily advanced until he now occupies this honored position. It would not surprise us, if he should be appointed Major or General before the close of this war.

MOUNT WOLLASTON BANK. The following named gentlemen were unanimously re-elected Directors of this institution, on Monday last, viz:—Francis M. Johnson, Lewis Bass, Joseph W. Robertson, William S. Perry, William S. Morton, John Quincy Adams, Edward Turner and Eliza Frederick of Quincy; and John S. Fogg of Weymouth.

QUINCY STONE BANK. At the annual meeting held on Tuesday afternoon, the following named gentlemen were chosen Directors for the year ensuing:—Josiah Brigham, Adam Curtis, Daniel Baxter, Charles Marsh, and Charles R. Mitchell of Quincy; Apollas Randall of South Braintree; Jesse Bouton of Milton; and James Torrey of Weymouth.

ALL QUIET ON THE POTOMAC. This is the last telegram. Although it is said that McClellan is shoveling away for dear-life, and that Lee is preparing for another fight before he goes into winter quarters.

SPLendid FRUIT. We received a few days since from R. B. Leuchars, Esq., a very rich present of choice pears—our favorite fruit. They were of a superior kind—very large and of a most delicious flavor. Mr. L. has our gratitude, and our little ones return their hearty thanks.

HARVEST MOON. We have had a streak of most beautiful weather. Although the rays of Old Sol was of a melting nature; still, the evenings were delightful. Madame Lunar never shone with more refulgence; and as mid-summer.

OCTOBER. This is a busy month with the farmer. And this year their duties will be multiplied; for the crops of every kind are abundant. But the work is going bravely on, and in a few weeks they will all be garnered in. And then for a season of thanksgiving.

THE POLITICAL FIRMAMENT is somewhat agitated at present; a storm is brewing, which will increase in intensity until the day of November. The dominant party is losing faith in its immutability. A new party has suddenly arisen in the State, which is already respectable in numbers and influence; and the signs of the times are, that they will relieve the Republicans at the polls next month of the responsibilities of office which they have so long profitably held.

MAIL NOTICE. By the Post Office notice in our advertising columns it will be observed, that owing to a sudden change in the running time of trains on the Old Colony and Fall River Railroads, a change has been made in the hour for closing the afternoon mail, which will now close at 4 o'clock, instead of 4 45 as heretofore. The morning mail will close as before, at 7 o'clock. And both morning and afternoon mails will arrive as before.

RAILROAD TIME. We would call the attention of our readers to a change in the time of running the cars on the Old Colony and Fall River railroad, which took place on Monday last. For particulars, see advertisement in our columns.

One-third of the class of Harvard College of 1858 are engaged in the service of the United States.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 9, 1862.

The silvery days of October are delightful; fine weather has always a favorable influence on health, business and amusements—as we have seen in the city for several days past. Nearly all kinds of enterprise are flourishing, and many persons are treading the high way to competency if not wealth. There is, however, a little offset to this—the highest confidence is not cherished towards those who have the management of our armies; as from present appearances not much is expected from the army of the Potomac until next spring; many believe that our troops will soon take up their winter quarters near Washington and go through another mud campaign. This would be a damper on trade operations. Even now, good or bad times, prices of goods keep advancing beyond all precedent, and groceries will soon be so high that poor people will have to discontinue the use of tea, sugar, molasses, or find cheap substitutes for some of them. Cotton and woolen fabrics are so enormously high, that the ladies of the present day, like our good mothers of old, will perhaps resort to the loom and spinning wheel; for if the war continues, farmers will grow wool extensively in New England as a matter of economy for home consumption.

To the moment of my writing, the army is reported as quiet on the Potomac, but a desperate battle may be expected any time. Our war matters in the West look better for the Union cause, several Federal victories are claimed to have been achieved within a few days. We hope the reports are true. The worth of Gen. McClellan is more appreciated now than ever.

Among the local incidents of the week, was the fall parade of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery, Captain E. C. Bailey, the popular editor of the Boston Herald. This veteran corps, established in 1638, went to Malden. There they were received at the depot by the town authorities, and the school children, with bouquets, flags, &c. A fine collation came off under a mammoth tent, provided by the citizens of Malden. The occasion was one of much pleasantness, and to the delight of the school children.

Bureau's Aqueduct Gardens, the Boston Academy of Music, Howard Atheneum, Boston Museum, the National Theatre and Morris' Opera, are out with rich bills daily—and many of them have good houses. John B. Gough speaks to-night on the striking incidents of the war. He is a thrilling orator. The cause of education is not forgotten—under the direction of Joseph White, Esq., Secretary of the Board of Education, Prof. Geo. A. Eastman commences a course of free lectures to teachers of public schools, to-day, at 2 o'clock, p. m.—to be continued Saturdays, at 10 o'clock, a. m., and Wednesdays, at 2 o'clock, p. m. The lectures are to be given at the Museum of Comparative Zoology in Cambridge, accessible by horse cars from Boston every half-hour.

John Charles Sumner delivered his great speech on Emancipation as a policy and necessity for the suppression of the rebellion, on Monday, in Faneuil Hall. The attendance was large, and the remarks of Mr. Sumner evidently gave much pleasure to the Abolition element of Boston. It really was a well written speech, prepared with great care, and sustaining his views of the question, but so very usual with all who differed with him. He denounces party lines, but a more bitter and unrelenting politician than Charles Sumner cannot be found.

There has been some flutter in our political circles the present week. Two important gatherings have been held. The People's Convention at Faneuil Hall on Tuesday—a large gathering and harmonious action. The State Democratic Convention at Worcester yesterday of over seven hundred delegates. A Union ticket is adopted, as follows: for Governor, General Charles Devens of Worcester; for Lieutenant Governor, Thomas F. Plunkett of Pittsfield; Secretary of State, Oliver Warner of Northampton; for Treasurer, Henry K. Oliver of Salem; for Auditor, Levi Reed of Abington; for Attorney General, Henry W. Paine of Boston. It is clear that the contest in the coming State election will be narrowed down to two tickets; and the Union party if not completely successful will make large gains. General Devens, now in the army at the seat of war, is a lawyer by profession, originally from the western section of the State. In politics, he was formerly a Whig, and received the appointment of United States Marshal from the administration of General Taylor. Messrs. Plunkett and Paine are Democrats; the remainder of the State ticket are Republicans.

A WONDERFUL SPECIMEN OF ART IN JEWELRY. A jeweller exhibits in the World's Fair at London, a most accurate miniature portrait of the Queen, composed of distinct brilliant almost as fine as diamond dust, and of which more than 2,000 are required to complete the likeness, small as it is. Another jeweller contributes a necklace of diamonds, worth nearly half a million of dollars.

BRILLIANT IDEA. A gentleman who has spent some days in the region of the coal oil wells, in Pennsylvania, says that in his opinion the Government of the United States ought to interfere at once, and put a stop to further pumping and boring for oil on this continent. He is quite certain the oil is being drawn through these wells from the bearings of the earth's axis, that the earth will cease to turn when the lubrication ceases! Such suspension would beat anything that ever agitated Wall street, and the consequences be too great for ordinary minds to conceive or comprehend. It should be attended to at once.

MANNING THE NAVY. No European power can man the war vessels so rapidly as we can now. Hundreds of men who cannot be received apply to enlist in the naval service. If a crew for a ship is wanted, Mr. Welles gives the order, and in twenty-four hours the required number of sailors and ordinary seamen are on board.

YOUNG MEN, ATTENTION! We would call particular attention of all persons out of employment to the sale of Lloyd's Maps. They are the cheapest, most correct, and, in fact, the best maps in use. To give our readers some testimony of these facts, we would say that the Government uses these maps in preference to any others, for their land and naval expeditions. Any person can make from two to five dollars a day in selling these maps; for this reason, we would urge all out of employment to apply immediately for an agency. For particulars see advertisement in another column.

REBEL REVENUE BILL. The new revenue bill before the rebel Congress cuts to the quick. It provides for the levying on the 1st of January next, a tax of one-fifth on the value of the products of the land for the preceding year; one-fifth the value of the increase of horses, asses, cattle, sheep and swine; one-fifth the products made in feeding the same; and one-fifth the yearly income of each person. The rebels will pay dearly for their whistle.

A MOTION has been made in the Rebel Senate to send Commissioners to Washington to treat for peace, and an acknowledgment of the independence of the Confederate States, on account of the signal success that has crowned their arms for the last few months.

A LUMBERMAN from up the Yazoo River, Mississippi, recently came on board the United States gunboat Benton, who had never heard of the secession troubles. He had been in the gum swamps for four years; during a large proportion of the time he had not seen a single human being. When he met our gunboats and heard of the war he was much astonished, as may well be supposed. He was on his way to Vicksburg to sell his lumber.

A GOOD PLAN. The farmers and others of the town of Lexington have it in contemplation to collect a large quantity of apples to send to the hospitals for our sick and wounded soldiers. They hope that a thousand barrels can be obtained, as fruit is very abundant, and the people disposed to be liberal to those who have risked life and all in defence of their country. Let other communities follow their example.

ANTIETAM CREEK. The name of the creek in Maryland, where the great battle was recently fought, is pronounced as if written, An-tiet-am, with the accent on the second syllable. As it will probably give name to one of the greatest battles of the war, it is important that the correct pronunciation should be generally understood and adopted.

RESISTING THE DRAFT. They are resisting the draft in some townships in Ohio. The military has been called out; but the excited populace bid defiance to it and the administration.

THE NEW REVENUE STAMPS. The new Revenue Stamps required vary from one cent to twenty dollars in value. They all differ in size, color, denomination, design or character. Each stamp designates its particular purpose, and can be validly used for no other purpose or duty. There are twenty varieties, every one having different denominations. For instance, Inland Exchange has nine different stamps, varying in accordance with the value of the bill. Thus, some eighty five or more denominations are called for, and nearly two hundred engraved plates must be prepared. All of these are designed and executed in the highest style of art, and every protection of lathic work, original designs, finely engraved heads, &c., is lavished upon them. Some forty or fifty artists, engravers and operatives are busily engaged finishing the impressions as they pass through the varied processes of the engraving art, the subsequent printing, gumming and perforating. They are printed in Philadelphia, at the rate of fifteen million weekly.

AN OLD PEAR TREE. There is a pear tree in Salem, the known age is two hundred and twenty-four years. It is a mere shell, the heart being all gone, yet the branches are still in vigorous bearing, and this year were borne down with the weight of thirteen bushels of splendid pears.

FLAX. Good flax has been raised by O. Irwin, near San Rafael, Marin County, California. Flax is found growing wild in all the valleys and on the hill-tops, and with proper cultivation it could undoubtedly be made one of the staple products of the State. There is now a favorable opening for the cultivation of this plant. The seed is always marketable, and commands a high price.

SALT FOR THE RICHMONDERS. The Richmond Dispatch states that the city of Richmond has contracted for twelve thousand bushels of salt, which will be furnished to the householders of the city at five cents per pound, each household being entitled monthly to one pound for each person in his family, including old and young, white and black, male and female.

There will be a Free Lunch at the Hancock Saloon this evening.

CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT, No. 2. On taking the last Census, it was found that Massachusetts had not increased so rapidly in population as the Western States; consequently she was not able to hold her old number of Congressional Representatives, but lost one member, making the number under the new basis, ten, in former years being eleven.

In arranging the Congressional Representative Districts under the new system the Old Third, which had been for many years so aptly represented in Congress, was made the victim of political dissection.

The following towns comprise the new Second Congressional District, viz:—

Attleborough, Berkley, Dighton, Easton, Mansfield, Norton, Raynham, Rehoboth, Seekonk, Somerset, Swansea, and Taunton, in the County of Bristol; Abington, Bridgewater, East Bridgewater, Hingham, Hanover, Holl, Marshfield, Scituate, South Scituate, North Bridgewater, and West Scituate, in the County of Plymouth; Canton, Cohasset, Dorchester, Milton, Quincy, Randolph, Sharon, Soughton, and Weymouth, in the County of Norfolk, forms one District, and is known as District Number Two.

STOCKINGS FOR THE ARMY. All persons writing their friends in the service, are requested to mention having the legs of stockings preserved and sent home to be repaired; whether in single pairs or by collecting as many as possible, half the time and yarn may be saved. Great numbers will be called for: all who can knit will bear this in mind, and have them ready before the cold season is upon us.

NEW AND CHOICE GOODS. We would call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Cushman & Brooks to be found in another column of our paper to-day. Those visiting the city and in want of such articles we would advise to make them a call.

The Louisville Journal offers to publish runaways from the draft, with appropriate cuts, for one half the price usually paid for advertising runaway negroes.

Our Government has been offered from 1,000 to 10,000 German sailors for our navy at $15 each, passage included.

Capt. Wm. Gibson of Boston, of the Mass. 35th, had his life eyed in the late battle by wearing an armor vest.

The editor of the Lawrence American, having enlisted in the nine months quota, publishes a portrait of his editorial substitute while absent in the war. It looks very much like a pair of scissors.

TO OUR READERS. We have got at last what we have all needed, and been wishing for, to wit: cheap travelling accommodations to different parts of the town. Thanks to the energy and enterprise of one of our young townsmen. We would refer our readers to Abbott & Co's advertisement—their "Cheap Accommodation Line," which can be found in our columns this week; we hope that the public will show their appreciation by giving them their patronage, as they are certainly deserving of it, for engaging in an enterprise of so much benefit to the public.

TO REMOVE RUST. Cover the knives, etc., with sweet oil, and rub it on well; after two days take a lump of fresh or quick lime, and rub till all the rust disappears. The oil and lime forms a sort of soap, which carries off all the rust. If new steel articles are rubbed well with oil, and not polished off until twenty-four hours after they do not rust so soon.

Another Free Lunch at the Mariposa Saloon this evening.

We would call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of GRAY'S HAIR RESTORATIVE, in another column. The certificate of ROBERT MURRAY, Esq., United States Marshal for the Southern District of New York, will be read with interest by all those in search of such an article.

All orders promptly and faithfully executed. Quincy, Feb 8

Poetry.

For the Patriot.
To the Quincy Boys of Co G

Here are the brave boys of Quincy,
In the Boston Fusiliers,
Men of nerve and energetic,
Men, whose bosoms knew no fears;
First, then gallant Thaddeus Newcomb,
Once in Hancock Light Guard, he Was a Captain brave and fearless,
And we love him here in G.

Albert A. Holt, who far has traveled,
Bishop, who is in our flock,
And who in three months service
Proved as firm as any rock,
Then comes gallant Henry Studley,
He's the lad who sang a song,
Then Ben Pierce, and Levi Vincent,
With our heroes march along.

Ben did leave the famous tin shop,
He did leave the countless pots,
And he does not fear the traitors,
May he dodge all rebel shots;
After comes the brave Dick Ellis,
Left unfurnished Granite Store,
Left the dye that he was cutting,
And he now goes Marching on.

Then Dan Dingman, the hearty,
Here we welcome him with cheers,
With the Forty-Ninth disgusted,
He has joined our Fusiliers;
Then James Vance, who digs potatoes,
Let us speak the hero's praise,
Though he did stand the guard boys,
After digging hard two days.

Now there comes our gallant Parrot,
We can't keep him in a cage,
Once he was a famous boatman,
He's a wonder of the age;
Parrot, your a famous fellow,
May your glory never be o'er;
Don't you think that yet Jeff Davis,
Will run his cursed sloop ashore.

George R. Perry, a true boatman,
Once the Robert's Captain stood,
Now he leaves that yacht so handsome,
And he stands for his country's good;
Afterwards comes William Logan,
He is not from Logan O'Brass;
But the shies of Massachusetts,
Often will own him praise.

Next there's Obed Franklin Allen,
Leaves his yacht the River Queen,
Then there's Francis Nott the fearless,
With a hero make I ween;
Henry Horne, the young undaunted,
Bravely will he stand the blast,
And the yacht is left by Bassell,
With us here his lot is cast.

Now he would defy the traitor,
And would at the desert's head,
But you'll place to answer, Freeman,
Tell us, where's the slush?
After him, comes Albert Hayden,
His heart all comes Albert Hayden,
Then we've Higgins, no need war's man,
And the wagon driver, End.

Brave John Hammond, comes undaunted,
Pleasant as the ocean's tide,
Now brave William, with his horses,
Asks how people like his style,
Now I'll speak of brave Luzzard,
The brave fisherman, so grand,
In the Twenty Fourth Old Bay State,
He was drummer in the band.

Later was Luzzard married,
Later did he take his bride,
And he'll think upon his often,
As he sails upon life's tide,
Here's unto our Union Heroes,
Let us give them hearty cheers;
We are gallant boys of Quincy,
And in Procter's Fusiliers.

Bold James Vinal, now is coming,
Hail our hero with three cheers!
Let us all be brave and manly,
Honor to the Fusiliers,
Cheer for Quincy, ne'er disgrace her,
We will all be brave and true,
As we march along to Dixie,
For the Red, White and Blue.

Anecdotes.

After a certain naval battle, an Irishman
was employed to throw the dead overboard,
when all the wounded had been sent below.
Taking up the body of a supposed dead sailor, he rested it on the taffrail.

What the devil are you going to do with me? says Jack.

Throw you to the fishes, or coarser, says Pat.

But I ain't dead! argued the sailor.

Faith says Pat, the doctor pronounces ye dead, and sure he must know better nor you do what's the matter with ye.

Is that clean butter? said a person a short time ago to a countryman, who had a wagon full of butter for sale in the market.

Guess it o't to be, said the fellow, for it took the old woman and three boys all last night to pick the hairs out o't!

Gen. Lee one day found Dr. Cutting, the army surgeon, who was a handsome and dressed man, arranging his cravat complacently
before a looking glass.

Cutting, said he, you are the happiest man
in creation.

Why, General?

Why, replied Lee, because you are in love with yourself, and have not a rival on the earth.

How long did Adam remain in Paradise
before he sinned? asked an amiable carpa-ssus to her loving husband.

Till he got a wife, answered the husband, calmly.

You can't do too much for your employers,
my man, said somebody to a big-fisted and strong-backed man-of-all-work, on the wharf
one day.

Arrah, be jabbers, replied Pat, with emphasis—neither will I.

Hope.

Hope is like the dawn of morning
Breaking through the misty night,
Each of nature's words adorning
With a pure and holy light:
Like the gentle evening shower,
Scattering fragrance all around,
Opening every little flower
Germinating from the ground.

Let us, then, forever cherish
Hope, to lift our hearts on high;
That our spirits may not perish,
Or our happy dreamings die;
That when earthly ties are riven,
And we leave this world of care,
We may meet again in heaven,
Each the other's joy to share.

Wind and Rain.

Rattle the windows, winds!
Rain, drip on the pane!
There are tears and sighs in our hearts and eyes;
For the life we live in vain!

The gray sea heaves, and heaves,
On the dreary flats of sand;
And the blasted limb of the church-yard tree
Shakes like a ghostly hand.

The dead are engulfed beneath it,
Sunk in the grassy waves;
But we have more dead in our hearts to-day
Than the earth in all her graves!

Scraps.

A respectable gentleman doesn't like to have a heavy charge leveled against him, especially if it is a gun.

Won't that box constructor bite me? said
a little boy to a showman.
Oh, no, boy; he never bites—he swallows his wittles whole.

Each thing lives according to its kind; the heart by love, the intellect by truth, the higher nature of man by intimate communion with God.

It is singular how rapidly some young gentlemen from the country lose their color,
when visiting large cities. They go there very green, and invariably come away done very brown.

Romance. Sentimental young lady, rescued from drowning. I must and shall marry the noble being. Practical parent—Why, my dear, is a dog.

In giving advice, man is not unlike a signpost at a forked road, which stands ever ready to point out the right road to the solicitous wayfarer, but never follows it himself.

Intellect is not the moral power; conscience is. Honor, not talent, makes the gentleman.

The road ambition travels is too narrow for friendship, too crooked for love, too rugged
for honesty, and too dark for science.

It is strange that people burn with rage
only when they are put out.

How singular that fuel and thick clothing always rise in the Fall.

Goldsmith says that a woman decked out in all her charms is the most terrible object in all creation.

History resembles a tree, which gradually loses its foliage and limbs, and in time becomes a shapeless trunk.

A gent was asked what kind of a gal he preferred for a wife? One, he said that wasn't prodi-gal, but fru-gal, a true-gal, and suited to his congo-gal taste.

Lord Upmoss sold Brown a horse. B.
meeting the peer some time after, said,
Why, your lordship told me that your horse had no fault, and he is blind of an eye. All right, says my lord, blindness is no fault; it's only a misfortune.

Reputation is often got without merit and lost without a crime.

Our grandmother used to say to grandfather, it is no use quarrelling my dear, when you know we must make it up again.

You know a gentleman by his gait, and a blackguard by his billingsgate.

What is the difference between October and November? With October the leaves fall; with November the Fall leaves.

Miscellaneous.

A Fearful Ice Adventure.

It is now several years since, that I was returning from the survey of the northwestern district of Lake Superior, my portion of the duty being finished. Winter with its wild winds and deep snows, had already set in, and instead of the usual lake voyage, my journey to the land of civilization had to be performed in a sleigh. Each day I took my way over roads whose ruts the snow had filled, while my horses' bells rung gaily out through the snow-clad forest, whose pendant icicles flashed in the sun-rays like a fruitage of gems; and when night came, I never failed of a welcome beneath the bark-roof of the nearest settler,—where my news—
albeit five months old—was more prized than my dollars; and my French Canadian servant, with his broken English jests, and his sweet old Provencal songs, was more regarded than myself.

We had passed Lake Superior, and were threading the forest bordering Lake Huron,
when one evening we came to a better cultivated farm than usual, and stopped at a door of a large farm house, where the scraping of fiddles and echoing of feet announced
one of those blithesome frolics with which the settlers at intervals lighten the monotony of backwoods' life. On such occasions every guest is welcome, and we were rapturously received, though the house was crowded to suffocation. But it soon appeared this was an extraordinary festival,
being for the bridal of our host's daughter,
whom all these friends—who came from many miles round—were to accompany to see the knot tied on the morrow. What a joyous scene it was! How they jested and laughed till the music was almost drowned, and despite the crush, danced merrily until the spruce and juniper wreaths trembled on the walls, and the forest of candles flickered above our heads; now footing old forgotten dances with the rosy bridesmaids, in their yet redder ribbons, now clustering in triumph round the soft-eyed bride, the fairest flower
I ever saw in that wild region.

The sun rose on our unwearied revels, ushering in the wedding day. A hearty breakfast was dispatched, and then one and all—for I deferred my journey in honor of the occasion—prepared to escort the bride on her way.

Through many of the backwoods' settlements clergymen have never passed, and troths are lawfully plighted before the nearest magistrate. But on the present occasion it chanced that a clergyman was visiting his brother at a farm some twenty miles distant,
and the marriage was hurried that the bride might have the advantage of a "parson's wedding." My two-horse sleigh being the best appointed vehicle in the company, I placed it at the bride's disposal, and we were soon speeding through the forest, followed by a bevy of sleighs and trains, filled with a laughing crowd; and while the sleigh bells rang out the merriest of bridal peals, the young settlers played wild choruses upon their horns, until the old woods echoed with their minstrelsy.

About mid-day we reached our destination,
but had to wait the conclusion of another ceremony. It was a wedding, and the strangest I ever saw, for the bride was portly, the bridegroom grizzled, and they made the responses with a decision which showed they had quite made up their minds; while occupying the bridesmaids' station in the rear,
was an open-mouthed cluster of wondering juveniles, the off-spring of the bride and bridegroom, who had long been legally, as they were now religiously, married.

The young people's turn was next; and despite the struggles of the little ones, and the boisterous laughter of their elders, they were duly christened, and then led away by their newly wedded parents, amid a hurricane of congratulations and cheers, which lasted until they had driven off in the two trains awaiting them.

Then came the wedding of our own fair bride, and she seemed almost scared to find how solemn were the words which bound her to share the burdens as well as joys of her bridegroom; but she had always meant to do so; and taking heart of grace, she smiled happily as he handed her into my sleigh for the return journey. Again we swept through the bush with laugh and jest, and in the intervals my servant, Antoine, sang jubilantly bridal psalms, and trolled my old balads of love and marriage enough, to have turned Hymen-ward a whole community. But after a time there were none but the newly wedded and myself to listen for my high-bred horses, fresh as when we started, had far outsped the heavy steeds of the other travellers, and were running them out of sight and hearing.

Let us go by the lake-shore, cried the bridegroom; then you'll see the "Tumble,"
and we will be home yet before they are.

The idea was highly approved by the newly-wed in utter abandonment of spirit, not only made wife, and as I was somewhat weary of myself of the monotony of the woods, I read the young life she must so shortly render up, ily agreed. Between us and the shore was not the sudden parting from the beloved a winding gully filled with frozen snowdrifts
she should never see again.

Meanwhile the moon rose in the deep-ice bordering the land. Beyond was the blue lake, which, so far as we could see, stretched a vast expanse of blue, refreshing to thin broken rays on the broad lake, which now eye weary by the universal whiteness, an-trolled in waves around us, and shining like a glory on the distant hills, giving us one more glance at earth.

But the cold was intense. The wind, straight from the frozen north, swept over the lake in fitful gusts, and seemed to pierce us like icy arrows; and though, wrapped in the heavy sleigh furs, we crouched within its narrow limits, we could scarce endure the rigor of the night; and, worse than all, our fair companion had to share these hardships with no protection save the most sheltered corner of the sleigh, and the warmest wrapper; yet she never murmured, but, with the gentle heroism of her sex, laid her head silently and now tearlessly on her husband's shoulder; and I thought she prayed. Day at last broke on this long night of misery and desolation. The imperceptible current of the lake had swept us out of sight of land, and the huge mass of ice lay steadily as an island among the surrounding waves. We told ourselves we had no hope of rescue, yet long and anxiously we watched the circling horizon for some sign of coming aid, and it was a deeper despondency we discovered that, as far as the eye could reach, there was nothing but lake and sky, save on one spot some five miles distant, where floated a fragment of our raft, which, cracked from the commencement, had parted during the night, bearing away with it both our horses. And as the day wore on, another hardship was added, which redoubled all the rest—that of hunger. Since the preceding morning we had eaten nothing, and our long exposure to the cold began to make the want severely felt; while, though many birds flew over the lake, not one came within reach of our rifles to soften this new calamity.

Two days passed, and no words' can tell the intensity of our sufferings as we floated on that frozen prison, which the winds and waves appeared powerless to destroy; each hour served but to augment our misery; and when the third day broke upon us, cold and exhaustion were fast doing their work, and we lay helplessly in the corners of the sleigh, as it seemed about to die. But the young bride still bore up; whether it was the unbroken vigor of her youth sustained her, or that marvelous endurance of her sex, which has so often carried them through wreck and tempest, I know not, but she was still comparatively unshaken, and while she drew her coverings more closely round us, she earnestly entreated us still to hope and trust. I began to think with horror that a time would shortly come when the unhappy girl would be left alone upon the ice.

Thus another night closed on our sore extremity, and we did not think to live it out.
As the hours passed, a furious storm arose upon the lake, lashing its waters into foaming billows, which dashed against our raft, as if they sought to shatter it in pieces; clouds, black as ink rolled over the sky, and appeared to fill the air; and, to crown all, the faintness of our hunger was succeeded by raging pains, almost beyond endurance, and which hourly seemed to increase. Never have I suffered as I did that night. It was well nigh maddening, and many times, as we sat covering in the sleigh, listening to the rushing of the waves, did we almost pray that they would overwhelm our raft at once, and end our misery. At length this desire seemed granted. There was a sudden crash, and a violent concussion, as though we had struck upon a rock, and the billows beat and roared more wildly than ever. But in the darkness we could distinguish nothing, and pressing down our hunger, we sat with clasped hands and bowed heads awaiting our doom. While we still waited, the dawn crept over the sky, and our indomitable bride, springing up, uttered a cry of joy, then threw herself weeping in her husband's arms. Before us, rising in hills and valleys, lay the snow-clad land, and against its icy border our raft was tightly jammed. Though we guessed it not, the gale had blown from the south, and, by the mercy of Providence, it had driven us back to the northern shore of the lake, and thus saved our lives.

Not far off, the ascending snow announced
a dwelling, but we had no strength to reach it; so we fired our rifles, a signal which quickly brought the inhabitants to the shore.
They proved to have been members of the late wedding frolic; and nothing could exceed their astonishment and joy at our discovery, which was utterly despaired of. Every possible care and kindness was lavished upon us, and the bride's parents and friends summoned to rejoice over their lost lamb
that was found. "All's well that ends well," we thankfully agreed; but never shall I forget the intense misery and suffering of that adventure on the ice.

David's Perplexity.

The fishermen of the north of the Frith of Forth have always been looked upon by those of the south shore as little more than savages, and very unpolished. At one time a heavy easterly storm drove a Buckhaven boat toward the Dunbar coast, and during the detention of several days one of the north shore
boys fell violently in love with a strapping damsel of Dunbar, whom he ultimately married. The young bride did her best to instruct her husband in the purer language and less jaw-breaking dialect of the aristocratic south shore; but he was a very slow pupil,
as the sequel will serve to show.

In process of time a son was born to the loving pair, and all in due order a second youth, the very image of his mother, made his case known in the house of his father, shortly after which the following colloquy was held:—

Noo, Dauid, ye're gawn to the minister's to see about the baptism; but, mind, ye're no
to speak about the bairn; that's a vulgar word—just like ye talk o' Fife. Eh, mon, gin I had ye over at Dunbar, I wad mak a man o' ye! bi, Dauid, my man, ye're to say to the minister:

Gin ye please, Mr. P—k, will ye come down this e'enin' and baptize the infant?
Mind, noo, Dauid, no the bairn, bi the infant.

David looked with wonder on his young wife, at her learning and good breeding, and loved her more than ever. But the word infant was new to him; it was too soft and sweet for his untutored lips; but, true to his love, he tried it, and promised her faithfully to try it again, and mottoring it over and over—infant, infant, infant—took his way toward the minister's house. But, before he reached it, David had lost the flow of the syllables, and before he had recovered his presence of mind he found himself in the minister's hall. The worthy minister, half suspecting what had brought the fisherman along so early, said—

Well, David, how are ye all down the way?
Brawley, sir, thank ye, we're as weel as can be expected.

Ah! said the minister, has there been anything o' the wind, David?

Oy, ay, sir, the wife's been down.
Ay, David! It'll be a lassie this time?

No, sir, replied David, it's no a lassie.
Hoot, man, said the minister, another laddie! Ye'll be made up wi' laddies, if ye gang on at this rate.

Weel a-wat, no, said David, it's no a laddie sibber.

David, David! asked the minister, in sore astonishment, what is it, mar, if it's neither a laddie nor a lassie?

Weel, sir, replied David, as sure as death,
I dunna mind, but I think the wife called it an elephant?

Soldier's Health.

The Sanitary Commission have reported that the general rate of disabilities by sickness in the army is one hundred and four persons out of one thousand; whereas, only thirteen out of a thousand should be sick at any one time in common life. A Massachusetts regiment, after being a year at the seat of war, has lost no more men from all causes than would have been the case under the ordinary circumstances of home life. A New York city regiment, after three months of camping, lost but one man out of eight hundred, and he had heart disease before he left home. But it was a regiment whose average of intelligence and culture was perhaps the highest among the whole Federal force.

Both these cases show that camp life is not necessarily fatal to health or life to a remarkable extent, and that the exercise of an intelligent care on the part of each individual soldier may almost banish disease from an army. And if the officers would cooperate with the men, would encourage them and do all in their power to facilitate their efforts in this direction, the cost of the war and its duration would be most favorably modified.

It is true that only one result is possible,
even if Washington were laid in ashes, and the enemy were besieging New York and Boston—the annihilation of the Confederacy;
still it is desirable to do this in the shortest
time and at the least cost of life and treasure.
To bring this about in the most enduring manner, while the Government is wisely waiting on events, until the proper moment arrives for the grand consummating act, let each soldier for himself, and each soldier's friend at home, and each patriotic officer among too many who are not so! do all that is possible to keep the army in the very highest state of health; because health is efficiency! Just as Lord Nelson's ship was leaving England, he discovered that the flaunel shirts of the men were six inches shorter than they ought to have been, and refused to go until the proper kind were furnished. He was ridiculed and called an old granny.—

The result was, that while the rest of the fleet was decimated, he did not lose a man!
and his ship, in efficiency, was as good as any two others! Aside from the dictates of humanity, a soldier's health should be the highest consideration of any officer who hopes to accomplish great results.—Hall's Journal of Health.

For the Patriot: A Dialogue.

Mrs. Furber—Pray tell me, my son, what is it that you find so interesting in the Patriot this week? I do not know as I ever saw you so interested in a newspaper.

Charles—Why, haven't you read Abbott's Advertisement in this week's paper? he has got ever so many new things that he is selling very cheap. Did you know that he was selling the best spools of cotton for four cents a spool?

Mrs. Furber—Yes, my son, I have heard that he was. It is very cheap. They ask me eight cents at other stores.

Charles—Then why don't you go to Abbott's and do your trading, mother? I should think that you would—he sells so many useful things so much cheaper than other dealers.

Mrs. Furber—I have thought about it, but you know it is some ways for me to walk from the Point to the Square, and if I should ride every time I wanted those small articles, they would cost me more than if I had bought them near home; but now Mr. Abbott has got that cheap Omnibus Line to running, I shall go to the Square to trade with him, for I can save so much that my ride will not cost me any thing.

Charles—Why, yes, mother; now suppose you wanted only just two spools of cotton, there is eight cents saved and two papers of pins that is eight cents more. Now only think,
if you wanted just those two small articles,
you would save enough to get your ride for nothing and be four cents in, and for that four cents you could get me a top, and the song of "Marching Along," and get little Ella a cradle and a little doll to put in it;
wouldn't that be nice.

Mrs. Furber—Well, my little philosopher,
I think that you are about right this time,
and this afternoon I shall go to Abbott's and get those very things that you have named, as I am much in need of them, and at the same time I shall get an opportunity to call on my friend Mrs. Merriam, whom I have so long desired to see; and if you are a good little boy, that four cents extra shall be spent for you and your little sister Ella,
as you wished.

Charles—Oh good! good!! good!!! won't that be splendid, Ella.

Ella—Oh yes, Charles.

Charles—Mother, what do you think I heard some men say, that were talking together
when I was up to the Square the other day?

Mrs. Furber—I cannot think, my son.

Charles—Well mother, I heard one man say to another, have you heard the news?
the other said no, what is it?

Why, they say that Abbott is trying to make arrangements with the Directors of the Horse Railroad Corporation to carry people from Quincy Point, Milton Railway, and the West District, to Boston, for the same price that they have to pay to go in from the Square! Won't that be nice?

Mrs. Furber—Why, yes; that is an excellent idea. I hope he will be successful;
I think that more people would ride in the Horse Cars then; and, a great many who live in Weymouth would be likely to walk over the bridge at the Point and go that way—
it would be so much cheaper.

Respect for the Aged.

In ancient Sparta there was a law which compelled the youths to rise when an old person approached; to be silent when they spoke; to yield them the path when they met them. With us what the law does not enforce, decency should prompt us to perform.
Respect for the aged teaches such a beautiful moral that those who forget to practise it themselves can do no less than applaud it in others.

An ancient Athenian was looking for a seat at the Olympic games, but the benches were already filled. Some of his youthful fellow citizens called to him to approach them, and when he had, with much difficulty, complished with their invitation, instead of welcoming him to a seat, they only greeted him with coarse bursts of derisive laughter.— Pushed from one place to another, the gray-haired old man approached the place occupied by the Spartans. These youths, faithful to the sacred custom of their country, modestly arose and gave him a seat among them. The same Athenians, who had so imprudently mocked the venerable man,

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Oct. 18th, 1862.

"Born to no Master, of no Sect are we."

SAD INTELLIGENCE. Telegraphic dispatches were received on Thursday by the friends of Corp. Loring A. Bigelow, stating that he was falling fast, and would probably survive but a short time. This brave youth is probably quietly resting, ere this, in the arms of his Maker, free from all care and sorrow, and numbered with those that have fought, bled and died in his Country's cause. It will be remembered that this promising youth received a severe wound in the foot, at the battle near Centerville, (Va.) on the 30th of August last, and laid some seven or eight days without having his wound dressed; and has since submitted to two amputations.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT. While Mr. James M. Thayer, a respectable citizen of South Braintree, was on a visit to a neighbor's yard, (Monday, Sept. 30,) where they were digging a well, the derrick gave way, and falling on Mr. T., injured him so seriously, that he lived but three days. What throws around the accident, a shade of singularity, was, that it happened on the same day, and almost the same hour, that Mr. Alpheus Nightingale, of this town, died so suddenly—as they were connected, by family ties—marrying sisters. The deceased leaves a widow and two married daughters.

FALL BUSINESS. We were never better prepared to aid the community in rolling up a snug business during the interval between this and New Year. Let advertisers, therefore, send in their favors, which will be duly honored, and every effort made to promote their interests. Our job office, also, will in a few days receive an accession of new materials, which will enable us to execute any order in that line without the fear of competition; posters, bill-heads, circulars, business and visiting cards—in fact, every description of letter press printing. We invite a trial.

POLITICAL MEETING. A very large gathering of the citizens of Braintree and vicinity was held in the Town Hall in that place, on Wednesday evening, to listen to an address from the Hon. Charles Sumner. The lecturer delivered an eloquent and able speech, and was loudly applauded.

THE HUTCHINSON FAMILY will give one of their interesting Concerts at the Town Hall, on Tuesday evening, October 21.—The programme for the evening's entertainment, abounds with national songs, which breathe a war spirit more defiant than the most high seasoned speech of any political orator. The Hutchinsons have always been favorites in the musical world,—we bespeak for them a cordial reception. Their advertisement appears in our paper to-day.

INFORMATION WANTED. A deaf and dumb boy was picked up in our streets, one day the present week and carried to the Alms house. Any information concerning this boy will be thankfully received by the Superintendent.

GOLD AT A PREMIUM. Gold was quoted in New York, one day this week, at fifty cents premium; that is, its representative, the best of our paper currency, not even the legal tender of the Government, could buy it short of that figure.

IMPORTANT. It is coming the season of the year when it is very necessary to have the feet well protected from the frost, and dampness. We know no better way to do this than for our readers to call at the New Boot and Shoe Store, and procure a good and serviceable pair of Boots, for men, women or children, of which no better assortment can be found in this vicinity. See advertisement.

FIRE. About 9 o'clock, on the evening of the 18th instant, the grocery, dry goods and clothing store of S. S. Reed, East Weymouth, was destroyed by fire, with all its contents; the cause is not known. The upper part of the building was occupied by Mr. Reed's brother, as a boot and shoe manufactory—a part of the contents of which were saved.

VERY HANDSOME BROWN HATS for Boys, at George L. Gil's, 84 Hancock St.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN in company with Generals McClellan and Halleck has been visiting some of the late battle fields. It is said, that he was much pleased with the excursion.

Rev. Mr. Russ, of Somerville, will preach in the Universalist Church next Sunday.

LADIES' FINE CALF BALMORAL BOOTS, TRICK SOLES. Just right for the season, can be found at George L. Gil's, 84 Hancock St.

Further Intelligence from Serg. Carver.

METHODIST CHURCH HOSPITAL, SHARPSBURG, (Md.) Oct. 6.

DEAR MADAM: Your husband is now lying wounded at this hospital. He was struck while on the retreat on the 20th of September, the shot going through the body near the right side. The surgeons at first thought he would not live, but at present he is getting along very well. He wishes to say that he received the things you sent. He is not fit to be removed at present; but if he improves fast, he may be removed to one of the Northern hospitals before long. He is very comfortably cared for; the ladies of the town bring in things to eat, and show a great deal of kindness to our brave men, who have been wounded in putting down this wicked rebellion. He says keep up good courage, that he will write himself as soon as he is able. He will probably remain here for some time. Very respectfully,

J. H. OGDEN.

To Mrs. L. R. CARVER.

For the Patriot

Justice to All.

MR. EDITOR. I see by the columns of the Patriot that Quincy is not behind hand in responding to the call of the President for more troops. I am glad to see so many ready and willing to enrol their names in this great cause, and I feel that something beneficial will be the result. I see by your paper that the town voted to pay those men that would enlist for three years $125, and also those that would enlist for nine months the same. I must say that I think the citizens of Quincy are deserving of great praise for their patriotic deeds, especially the Ladies. But, I see nothing in the columns of your paper, that provides a bounty for those that left their homes and friends to answer the President's first call; I see nothing about providing a bounty for those that carry an honorable scar received on the field of battle. There are a great many troops in the field from Quincy, that served in the three months' campaign, and the most of those enlisted again, soon after getting home; these I think deserve as much praise and bounty as those that are leaving home now. I hope that the citizens of Quincy will make some arrangement whereby they can pay a bounty to those that answered the first call, and have served the whole campaign. There are a great many that were getting good wages when the war broke out, and who left everything for the sake of their country, while others staid at home and worked as long as they could get work to do, and then received a bounty to go and help their brothers in the field. Perhaps this is right, but I hope and trust that the town will not overlook those that have served their country so well.

WAR EXPENSES. Some idea of the amount of ammunition requisite to supply such an army as McClellan's in a heavy fight such as that of Antietam, may be gathered from the fact that thirty tons of ammunition were forwarded to Gen. McClellan in one day, from Washington. An eye-witness of the battle states that he counted at four different times during the day, the number of discharges from our artillery, and found that they were made at the rate of 78 to the minute.

WHEAT CROP OF THE WEST. The receipts of wheat in Chicago within the past twenty-two days, compared with the receipts during the corresponding period in 1861, show a falling off this year of over one million bushels; and this, too, when prices have ruled from ten to twenty-five cents per bushel higher than in 1861. The Chicago Tribune regards this as evidence of a short crop.

THANKSGIVING. Thanksgiving in New York State will be on the 27th of November. In New Hampshire, on the same day.

AN OLD LADY'S TRIBUTE. Among other articles received by the Washington Sanitary Commission, lately, was a good and patriotic old lady's tribute, to be laid on the altar of her country, bearing this inscription:—"These socks were spun and knit by Mrs. Zerubb Clapp, ninety-six years old, whose hands in youth were engaged in moulding bullets for the Revolutionary war. Keep the toes of these socks toward the enemy."—Charles town, (N. H.)

FARMER'S ALMANAC. We have received from the publishers, Messrs. Swan, Brewer & Tieston, the "Old Farmer's Almanac" for 1863. Time does not appear to dim the lustre of its usefulness. During the long period of its existence—over seventy years—its tables of time, tides and astronomical calculations, have always been made with great care, and held in high repute for their accuracy. It has ever bore the title of Farmer's Almanac, but it is every man's almanac, for it contains a variety of useful information which no family can well do without.

"APPLE BEE." Don't forget the Apple Bee which is to come off at the Town Hall, on Wednesday, October 22. We trust the call will meet with a hearty response; and that out of their abundance, our citizens will contribute liberally to aid these sisters of charity, in their labors of love for our noble and patriotic brothers in arms.

Their card appears in our paper to-day.

KNITTERS IN DEMAND. A good chance for the knitters is now existing. When socks are wanted for the army, to the extent of a million and a half; where they could be bought in June last for two dollars and twenty-five cents per dozen, four dollars is asked.

THEN AND NOW. Pins were worth a dollar a paper in 1812, and were poor at that time; now only one which finishes and sticks them into a paper. Saving pins a half century ago was as important as saving cents, and hence the habit of old gentlemen whose coat sleeves are ornamented with rows of them, rescued from loss.

WEYMOUTH COMPANY. List of killed and wounded in Co. H, 35th Mass. Regiment, in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam Creek:

Killed—David W. Cushing, William Pike, William Whit Smith.

Wounded—Captain B. F. Pratt; Orderly Sergeant, Daniel Lamson; Corporals B. F. Robinson, Francis A. Becknell; Privates John Tyndall, William White, John Estes, Charles Loring, George F. Thayer, Lawrence A. Ware, Henry Cushing, Alfred T. Cushing, Edwin Walker, Austin Beard, Charles Crocker, Alfred Peterson, Daniel L. Chapman, A. Clinton Hayden, Wm. H. Richards, Nathan F. Winslow, Edward B. Gardner, Charles Hawes, Michael Riley, Francis S. Pratt, and Charles H. Robbins.

Total wounded, 25. Total killed, 3.

Capt. Pratt, who was wounded in the left arm at the battle of South Mountain, was sent home by Colonel Wild, but has since joined his regiment. His wound is doing well.

Of the wounded there are not more than three whose recovery are considered doubtful. The rest are doing well.

SPECIE. The United States Economist estimates that there is fully one hundred million dollars more specie now in the United States than there was two years ago. The people will forget its color if it is not put in circulation before long.

MASSACHUSETTS IN THE WAR. Massachusetts will have sent in all, under the different calls of the President 80,000 men, as follows: 36 regiments of three years' men, 36,800; 19 regiments of nine months' men, 19,000; number raised to fill up the old regiments, 7,000; one miscellaneous contribution, 2,700; one cavalry regiment, 1,200; 12 batteries, 1,800; enlisted in the navy, 12,000.

GEN. BULL'S WAGON TRAIN. General Bull's train, which followed in the rear of his army on the march to Louisville, consisted of 1,800 wagons, drawn by 10,000 horses. There were also 1,500 convalescents from eighty-four different Regiments. Accompanying the train were 118 wagon loads of ammunition. It stretched a distance of twenty-five miles.

The Secretary of the Sanitary Commission at Washington gives notice that individuals and societies cannot send too many dried apples for the use of sick and wounded soldiers. They may be sent in barrels, boxes, or strong bags, marked "to be kept dry." All other dry fruits, or fruits in cans, are equally acceptable. They should be directed, per express, to F. L. Olmsted, Sanitary Commission, Washington, District of Columbia. How easily a party of young girls could collect and prepare a barrel of dried apples, and how very acceptable such a donation would be! Let some of our readers try it.

RECEIPTS FROM THE NEW TAX BILL.—The Washington correspondent of the New York Post says that the receipts from the new tax bill already reach half a million dollars.

THE ILLINOIS DEMOCRACY. Nearly all the old leading Douglas Democrats support the Administration earnestly, and have denounced the movements made by a portion of the party in the Southern section of the State. Generals McClellan and Logan, of Illinois, are among the Democratic Generals who stand by the Administration in the most vigorous prosecution of the war. It is said that they will also support the emancipation proclamation in Illinois. The number of prominent Democrats who will support the Administration in its new policy is hourly increasing.

THE STORY OF SOLDIERS THAT FILL UP OUR HOSPITALS. The experience of military men is decidedly unfavorable to the enrollment of young men under twenty-one years of age, for active service in the army. The hospital lists shows that youths of eighteen are not fitted to endure the fatigues and exposure of a campaign. It is by soldiers between the ages of eighteen and twenty years that our hospitals are mainly filled. Their constitutions, unformed and weak, give way in three cases out of four, during a protracted campaign, before the field of battle is reached.

Raspberries and violets were found in the field near Worcester last week.

POSTAGE STAMPS. The following order of the Postmaster General will be strictly enforced:

Every postmaster is instructed to treat as unpaid, any letter placed in a post office for mailing which may be covered with a stamp at all soiled or defaced, or which has apparently been used in payment of postage. Such letters will be sent at once to the Dead Letter Office.

BEING TAXED. One of the United States Assessors assured us that the utmost willingness to be taxed obtains favor among all whom he visits officially. It is not, he says, merely a willingness, the result of a consciousness that it cannot be helped, but it is cheerfully submitted to, without a murmur, as a necessity of the time. This is very creditable and shows that the heart of the people is with the country.—Boston Evening Gazette.

SUEZ CANAL. The Suez Canal is nearly completed, and the Viceroy of Egypt, announces that the opening will be celebrated a solemn fete to which all the world is invited. Let us all go!

THE CROPS IN MAINE. The Fall crops in Maine were probably never larger than now. The potato yield is large and the potato almost unknown. Corn, grain and fruit all very fine and the Fall feed abundant.

DEPICTED. Those who value health, comfort and beauty, in a regular and good set of teeth, we would recommend to the professional services of Dr. Gaylord, No. 13 Tremont Row, Boston. The Dr.'s proficiency in his art has earned him a wide celebrity. His work ever fails to give satisfaction, and his charge is always moderate.

DIRECTOR. Notice is given that letters addressed to persons on board any vessel in the navy, should be directed to the care of the Navy Department, at Washington, whence they will be forwarded by the first mail to the squadron to which the vessel is attached.

There will be a Chowder served up this day and evening at the Hancock Saloon.

For the Patriot.

A Member of the Bar in a Pickle.

Report does not say what kind of a BAR our legal friend pleads his last case at; but circumstances criticize it as being a bar of justice, from the termination of the catastrophe. After disposing of rather a dry case one of the profession bethought himself to while away a pleasant hour in the exciting recreation of angling. With hook and line bob and snooker, he sought the shore, and perched himself on a wherry, watching eagerly for a bite; outstripping his companions for a time, and getting somewhat elated, he perceived his cork suddenly to sink, and concluding that he had a Flounder at the lower end of his tackle, he straitened himself up for a vigorous haul; but it soon became apparent to his companions that the Flounder was at the other end of the line—from the splash in the water, and the cry that rang out—"A man overboard." He rose a wetter, if not a wiser man.

THE ELECTIONS in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, New Jersey and Connecticut, on Tuesday last, appears to have resulted in a Democratic triumph. Some States they have carried entire, and in others made large gains.

To Horse Owners.
DR. SWEET'S INFALLIBLE LINIMENT
For Swells is unrivaled by any, in all cases of Lameness, arising from Sprains, Bruises or Wrenching, its effect is magical and certain. It will also cure speedily. Sprain and Ringbone may be easily prevented and cured in their incipient stages, but confirmed cases are beyond the possibility of a radical cure. No case of the kind, however, is so desperate or hopeless, but it may be alleviated by this Liniment, and its faithful application will always remove the Lameness, and enable the horse to travel with comparative ease.
Every horse owner should have this remedy at hand, for its timely use at the first appearance of Lameness will effectually prevent those formidable diseases mentioned, to which all horses are liable, and which render so many otherwise valuable horses nearly worthless.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.
Father Abraham.

BY F. M. ADLINGTON—WEYMOUTH.

TUNE—"Tis my delight."

God Bless thee, Father Abraham,
The faithful and the just;
Successor to the friend of him
In whom we place our trust;
Of him who offer'd up his own,
In faith that God was true,
And dar'd believe the holy one,
What he had vow'd would do.

God bless thee, Father Abraham,
May glory's wreath entwine
A halo round the patriot's head,
Enlighten all mankind;
A halo round the patriot's head,
Enlighten all mankind.

God bless thee for thy trusting heart,
That justice would prevail;
And acting well the noble part,
Would heed no word like fail;
Uncounted millions will surround
The banner that you raise,
And Nations call that holy ground,
Where Freedom's Altars blaze.

God bless thee, Father Abraham, &c.,

God bless thee, Father Abraham,
Resources from sea to sea,
The favor'd of the great I Am,
Who makes his country free;
Break every yoke the mandate came,
But years had pass'd away,
And tyrants hold their power the same,
And men were forced to obey.

God bless thee, Father Abraham, &c.,

When Father Abraham heard the word,
Proclaim the jubilee,
He dared to obey the Sovereign Lord,
And set the bondmen free;
His deeds will meet their due reward,
The world his worth proclaim,
And millions yet unborn regard,
With reverence Lincoln's name.

God bless thee, Father Abraham, &c.,

No one to Love.

No one to love in this wide world of sorrow,
No tender bosom our fortunes to share,
No loving face from whose smile we may borrow Soothing in sadness, and hope in despair.
Pity the heart that doth silently languish,
Hiding its grief 'neath a summer day smile,
Mourn for the spirit that, proud in its anguish,
Sings while the bosom is writhing the while.

No one to love in the wide world around us,
Why should we care if we prosper or fail?
None will rejoice when the laurel hath crown'd us,
No one will lament when our glory wanes pale.
We are but wanderers o'er the earth's way,
None will follow our footsteps with prayer;
No quiet home, with its true hearts and loving,
Will watch our coming to shelter us here.

Oh! will a laugh that is sweetest and lightest
Thrill with wild anguish our hearts to the core,
Oh! will a glance that is kindest and brightest Mind us of those we shall never see more,
And when the garlands for beauty's adorning,
Bear the loved blossoms of those who have fled,
Oh! will affection, unmindful of scolding,
Turn from the living to weep for the dead.

On Guard

At midnight, on my lonely beat,
When shadow wraps the wood and lea,
A vision seems my view to greet
Of one at home that prays for me.

No roses blow upon her cheek,
Her form is not a lover's dream—
But on her face, so fair and meek,
A host of holier beauties gleam.

For softly shines her silver hair,
A patient smile is on her face,
And the mild lustrous light of prayer
Around her sheds a moon-like grace.

She prays for one that's far away—
The soldier in his holy fight—
And begs that Heaven in mercy may Protect her boy and bless the Right!

Till, though the leagues lie far between,
This silent mother of her heart
Steals o'er my soul with breath serene,
And we no longer are apart.

So guarding thus my lonely beat,
By shadowy wood and haunted lea,
That vision seems my view to greet
Of her at home who prays for me.

Anecdotes.

A scampish fellow was talking of taking a trip to France, when a companion meeting him in the street, inquired:
Well, Brown, my boy, when are you off?
To-morrow.
Going to take your wife with you?
No; it's a voyage of pleasure.

A barber having an intemperate man to shave on Sunday morning, begged him to keep his mouth shut, as it was a punishable offence to open a rum hole on the Sabbath.

Arrah, Teddy! and wasn't your name Teddy O'Byrne before you left dear old Ireland?
Sure it was my darlin'.
But, my jewel, why then do you add a and call it Teddy O'Byrnes now?
Why, you spalpeen, haven't I been married since I came over, and are you so ignorant of grammatics that you don't know when one thing is added to another, it becomes plural.

SPECIFIC PILL
A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR
Spermatorrhea, or Seminal Weakness,
and General Irritability in either sex.
This Malady, the terrible consequences of which are too well known to require more than a bare allusion to them, is one of the most insidious, and therefore dangerous of all the long categories of human ailments. It saps the very springs of Life, rapidly undermines the constitution, and enables the unhappy victim into indolence and a permanent grouch. From one to six boxes of SPECIFIC PILL are sufficient to effect a permanent cure in the most aggravated cases, whether Constitutional, or arising from Abuse or Excess.

MEDICAL TESTIMONY.
We believe it to be, in the treatment of Spermato-rhea, or Seminal Weakness, as near a SPECIFIC as any medicine can be.—B. Keith, M. D. [Ann. Jour. of Medical Science.]

I have found them all that could be desired.—
Then effect has been Truly Wonderful. I used them in a case of Spermatorrhea of long standing, which has been under treatment for years.

Coming.

BY ALICE CAREY.

They are mustering—they are marching!
How their onward tramping rolls!
They are coming, coming, coming!
A hundred thousand souls!

From the granite hills—the seaside—
In solid ranks like walls,
A hundred men to take the place
Of every one that falls.

Right on across the midnight—
Right onward, stern and proud—
Their red flags shining as they come,
Like morning on a cloud.

Battalion on battalion,
The West its banners poars.
For the colors God's own hand hath set
In the bushes at their doors!

In the woods and in the clearings
The lovers, brothers, sons,
The young men and the old men
Are shouldering their guns.

They have heard the bugle blowing—
Heard the thunder of the drum—
And further than the eye can see,
They come, and come, and come!

Straps.

Brace Bramble was elected sheriff last fall.
Bramble was very pompous, very complacent,
and very proud of the honor. His neighbors called to see him, to congratulate him. Approach said he, approach very near; though
I am sheriff elect, I feel that I am still one of you.

How few are our real wants! and how easy it is to satisfy them! Our imaginary ones are boundless and insatiable.

Those who think that money will do anything, will do anything for money.

Guilt quells the courage of the bold, ties
the tongue of the eloquent, and makes greatness itself sneak and lurk like a coward.

A Bangor newspaper says that a pig lately walked into a tailor's shop there, and before he was noticed by the proprietor, made his way toward the cutting-board—attacked no doubt by the smell of cabbage in that locality.

There is only one objection to people who
"mean well," and that is they never can spare time to carry out their meaning.

Wise men are instructed by reason, men of low understanding by experience, the most important by necessity, and brutes by nature.

There's two ways of doing it, said Pat to himself, as he stood musing and waiting for a job. If I leave me two thousand dollars, I must lay up two hundred dollars—I must lay up two hundred dollars a year for twenty years, or I can put away twenty dollars a year for two hundred years—now which shall I do?

Not long ago a youth, older in wit than in years, after being excited concerning the power of nature, replied:

Now I think there's one thing nature can't do.

What is it my child?
She can't make Bill Jones's mouth any bigger without settin' his ears back.

A gentleman somewhat distinguished for the use of choice language, found fault with his pudding, as having too much caloric in it, which the landlady took in high dudgeon, declaring that she never used the article—indeed, there never was any in the house.

A poor seamstress finds it hard work to thread her way through life's wilderness.

Someone says, it is well that we are not all perfect, for if we were, we should be so intolerably proud of it that there would be no getting along with us.

To find out the number of children in the street, commence beating a brass drum. To find out the number of idle men, start a dog fight.

An attorney, about to furnish a bill of costs,
was requested by his client, a baker, to make his light as he could. Oh! replied the attorney, that's what you say to your foreman,
but it is not the way I make my bread.

Ladies can draw a beau into a knot at the hymeneal altar.

Persons often lack courage to appear as good as they really are.

The Louisville Democrat suggests that if Jeff. Davis wants to get into a safe place, he had better climb a high tree and draw it up after him.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Oct. 25th, 1862.

"Born to no Master, no Sect are we"

Political Nominations.

DEMOCRATIC.—Senator for the East Norfolk District, Edward Avery, of Braintree; County Commissioners, Edwin R. Clark, of Sharon; Special Commissioners, Robert Vose of Dorchester, James E. Tuttle, of Quincy; Sheriff, John W. Thomas of Dedham; District Attorney, Waldo Colburn of Dedham.

PEOPLE'S.—For Congress, District No. 2 William D. Swan of Dorchester; Senator for the East Norfolk District, Jeffrey R. Brackett of Quincy.

REPUBLICAN.—For Congress, District No. 2, Oakes Ames of Boston; Senator for East Norfolk District, Francis M. Johnson of Quincy; Sheriff, John W. Thomas of Dedham; District Attorney, E. W. Harris of Bridgewater.

DEATH OF ANOTHER OF OUR VOLUNTEERS.—Intelligence was received here on Saturday morning last, of the death of Mr. Ezra Badger, a respectable citizen of the West District, in this town. He was a member of Captain Spear's Company, which left for the seat of war a few weeks since. His death, which was caused by a constitutional malady, was very sudden. He was sixty-four years of age, and leaves a widow.

ACCIDENT AT SOUTH BRAINTREE.—The train conveying the Third Regiment from Lakeville to Boston, on Wednesday, ran over a woman named Relief Pool, at Peach Street Crossing. Mrs. Pool with others were at the crossing to see the train as it passed, and as the train was coming she became alarmed for the safety of a lame grandchild, who was on the other side of the track. Contrary to the persuasions of her friends, she attempted to rush across in front of the engine, which struck her, throwing her twenty feet or more into a culvert, crushing her skull and fracturing her arm, causing instant death. A jury was summoned by Coroner French, which rendered a verdict according to the facts, without attaching blame to any one.

COAL.—The Philadelphia Inquirer says the quantity of coal brought to that city during the present season exceeds that of any past season by some thousands tons, and but one of the transportation lines has suffered severely by the freshets. There is no warrant, it thinks, for the great increase in price since summer, and several journals predict a fall after January.

No. 290.—The origin of the name of this famous or rather infamous ship, is not generally known. The ship was bought by a subscription made by 290 British merchants, from that honorable class of whom Burke said the counting house was their temple, the ledger their Bible, and gold their God. One of these days a settlement of this account will be made.

DEATH OF ELWOOD FISHER.—Elwood Fisher, who was one of the original secessionists and several years ago editor of the Southern Press, died at Atlanta, Georgia, recently. He was engaged in the secession conspiracy of 1850.

THE SECESSION IN NORTH CAROLINA.—The Northern Progress states that the Confederacy gained some 40,000 men by the conscription act in North Carolina, and the examining physicians, reported more than three-fifths of them as unfit for duty.

LADY'S BOOK.—We have received the November No. of this valued periodical. Its reading matter and embellishments, as usual, are of the first order. The volume is drawing to a close—the next number will complete it. This is a good time for subscribers to renew their subscriptions—and all who wish to make the acquaintance of Mr. Godley, to send in their address. For three dollars, they can secure for one year, the best family magazine, published in this or any other country.

OUR FIRST PAGE this week presents but little attraction to a certain class of our readers; it deals in plain matters of fact—a list of the legal voters of the town, as furnished us by the Selectmen. There are 1067 names given,—but notwithstanding this formidable array, we shall poll but a small vote at the coming election; as no small portion of the voters are with the army, and others are soldiering it elsewhere.

FIRST SYMPTOMS OF WINTER.—On Monday evening last, there was a heavy frost in this vicinity. The glass fell, we are told, in some localities, six degrees below the freezing point; this has been followed by others, which admonishes us that winter will soon be upon us.

CHOWDER.—There will be a Chowder served up at the Hancock Saloon, this day and evening.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 22, 1862.

A pamphlet appeared here on Saturday last from the pen of Hon. B. R. Curtis, late a Judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, which, from its great ability, sound reasoning and irresistible conclusions, is exercising a great influence upon the public mind. The subject is on "Executive Power," and has relation to the late orders and proclamations of President Lincoln, which are assertions, as Judge Curtis maintains, of transcendent Executive power. He says, "the second proclamation and the orders of the Secretary of War which follow it, place every citizen of the United States under the direct military command and control of the President. They declare and define new offences not known to any law of the United States. They subject all citizens to be imprisoned upon a military order at the pleasure of the President, when, where, and so long as he or whoever is acting for him may choose." They hold the citizen to trial before a military commission appointed by the President or his representative for such acts or omissions as the President may think proper to decree to be offences; and they subject him to such punishment as such military commission may be pleased to inflict. They create new officers in such numbers and whose occupations are to receive such compensation as the President may direct; and the holders of those offices, scattered throughout the States, but with one Chief Inspector at Washington, are to inspect and report upon the loyalty of the citizens with a view to the above described proceedings against them when deemed suitable by the central power." Judge Curtis goes on to show that the exercise of these colossal powers as a right cannot be found in any part of the Federal Constitution. In speaking of the authority of the President as Commander in Chief, he says, "that over all persons and property within the sphere of his actual observations in the field he may lawfully exercise such restraint and control as the successful prosecution of his particular military enterprise may in his honest judgment require; and upon such persons as committed offences against any article of war, he may through appropriate military tribunals inflict the penalty required by law—and there his lawful authority ends. He is a legislator still and has no more lawful authority to hold all the citizens of the country outside of the army than he has to hold the property of the country subject to his military requisitions. He is not the military commander of the citizens of the United States but of its soldiers." Quite a nice distinction in these times, when the writ of Habeas Corpus is suspended and freedom of speech and the press is forbidden. He concludes by asking,

"What then is to be done? Are we to cease our utmost efforts to save our country, because its Chief Magistrate seems to have fallen, for the time being, into what we believe would be fatal errors if persisted in by him and acquiesced in by ourselves? Certainly not. Let the people but be right, and no President can long be wrong; nor can he effect any fatal mischief if he should be."

"The sober second thought of the people has yet a controlling power. Let this gigantic shadow, which has been evoked out of the powers of the Commander in Chief, once be placed before the people, so that they can see clearly its proportions and its men, and it will dissolve and disappear like the morning cloud before the rising sun."

"The people yet can and will take care, by legitimate means, without disturbing any principle of the Constitution, or violating any law, or relaxing any of their stout efforts for their country's salvation, that their will, embodied in the Constitution, shall be obeyed. If it needs amendment, they will amend it themselves. They will suffer nothing to be added to it, or taken from it, by any other power than their own. If they should, neither the Government itself, nor any right under it, will any longer be theirs."

The election canvass of Massachusetts is progressing with much activity, and in some places with bitterness. On the basis of the President's Emancipation Proclamation the Republican party feel confident of victory, and those who oppose their ticket are branded as traitors or disunionists—political Bourbonists. How stands the case? The opposition to the secedent party of this State pledge themselves to stand by the General Government in the prosecution of the war to put down rebellion. They stand by and honor the Star Spangled Banner. They believe that freedom exists only in the Constitution; it confines and limits authority; it defines Executive, Legislative and Judicial power. They believe the Government to be one of laws, and not of men; and that the great object of the contest with Southern traitors by the enforcing the war is to restore the Union as it was, and preserve inviolate the Constitution as it is. Surely these are not disunion sentiments, but local and patriotic; and in spite of political machinery are not confined to one party organization, but dwell abiding in the bosoms of the masses.

CARPETS. By an advertisement which appears in our paper to-day, it will be seen that CARPETS of every description—of the most exquisite fabric and manufacture, and at reduced prices, may be had at Pray, Sons & Co's, Carpet Warehouse, 47 and 49 Summer street, Boston.

For the Patriot.

The Hospitals of Philadelphia

Mrs. GREEN: When I was in Quincy last summer, you kindly invited me to write something for your paper; a paper for which I formerly wrote considerable. I have thought it might be interesting to your readers to hear something about our United States Hospitals in this city. We have nineteen now in operation, and expect soon to have several more. The largest of them is a wonder. One of the surgeons told me a few days since that it occupied twelve acres of ground. It is elevated, and is out of the thickly settled part of the city. It contains 28 Wards, 167 feet long, by twenty-four feet wide. Each Ward will accommodate seventy patients. These Wards consist of two rooms, of fourteen feet each, twenty feet apart, and communicating with each other, and with the medical building, in the centre, by two corridors, 775 feet long. These are used for dining-rooms. Connected with these corridors, are large buildings for kitchens, pantries, store-rooms, &c. There are, also, separate buildings for baggage, knapsacks, storage, &c. In addition to these buildings, there are, also, 150 large tents, capable of accommodating 900 more patients. The Wards are all on the first floor and well ventilated. The whole Hospital will accommodate three thousand patients. It is a splendid affair.

We have a New England Society which has been doing much for the sick and wounded soldiers. We have rooms at the corner of Chestnut and 13th streets, to which any boxes or packages for the use of the soldiers may be sent, and their contents, such as stockings, shirts, drawers, &c., and jellies, preserves, &c., may be sent. We have, also, received money, which is applied to the wants of the soldiers; and we have often aided the widows, mothers and sisters of those who have died in removing home their bodies. In these, and many other ways, we have done much for the relief and comfort of the sick and wounded, and of the friends of those who have died. I am one of the committee for collecting funds, and, if any of your readers have a five dollar bill, or more or less to communicate to us for this good object, and will send it to me, as signed at the bottom of this note, I will see that it is faithfully applied to the purpose for which it is designed. I think there may be several of your readers who would like to help on so good a cause.

We have had, or now have soldiers here from nearly every town in New England, and I assure you it affords them much comfort to see one from their old home. We have a committee to visit every hospital in the city.

W. M. CORNELL, M. D.
No. 1432, South Penn Square, Philadelphia.

For the Patriot.

The People's Senatorial Convention.

To the Publisher of the Patriot:

At a Convention of the "People" of the East Norfolk Senatorial District, comprising the towns of Milton, Quincy, Weymouth, Braintree, Randolph and Stoughton, held at Braintree, on Tuesday last, your honored and distinguished townsman, Jeffrey R. Brackett, Esq., received on the first regular ballot twenty-six votes out of forty seven, and was afterwards unanimously chosen as their candidate for Senator.

This nomination, in our humble opinion, will give the utmost satisfaction to the citizens of the District, and particularly of your own town. Mr. Brackett by his hearty commendation and support given to Mr. Adams during the latter part of his Congressional career; by his efforts in securing the services of Judge Thomas, as his successor; by his ready aid and sympathy for the soldiers; and by his undeviating devotion to the Union and the Constitution, seems to be emphatically the man to receive the votes of the people, irrespective of all party associations.

BRAintree.

Further News from Corp. Carver.

Wesleyan Hospital, Sharpsburg, Oct. 19, 1862.

Mrs. L. R. CARVER.—DEAR MADAM:—Your husband who is and has been under my care for two weeks past has expressed to me a great desire that I should drop you a line giving an opinion of his present state. I can unhesitatingly say that his case is a hopeful one. He has passed through the most severe and critical period, and I now think that with good attention and nursing, both of which he has, he will recover. It gives me great pleasure to be able to announce the above information. I have taken considerable interest in your husband's case. He has acquitted himself with great credit and honor, and deserves fully the title of a brave soldier. I trust he may be permitted to fully regain his health and strength and once more rejoice his loved ones.

Very respectfully yours,
D. C. H. VON TAGEN.

P. S.—Since the receipt of the above a friend has returned from the immediate presence of Mr. Carver, and he fully corroborates the above statement, and there are strong hopes of his ultimate recovery.

Token of Respect.

At a meeting of the Vulture Engine Company No. 4, held at their Engine house, on Tuesday evening Oct. 21st, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

Whereas, It has pleased the Almighty Disposer of events, to remove from our midst by death, a member of this Company, Darius Birron,

Therefore, Resolved, That in the death of our beloved and respected brother, we have lost one of our most efficient and useful members. There are but few of us in whose death the department would have suffered so great a loss as in his. He was one of those men whom we always feel we cannot afford to lose.

Resolved, That it is with profound sorrow that we bow submissively to this act of an All-wise Providence.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with his sadly afflicted wife and family, thus suddenly left standing alone in the midst of an unsympathizing world, with no husband to lean upon for support; with no father to cling to for protection. May the Almighty—the "Father of the fatherless, and the widow's God"—be their support. We will remember them as the loved ones of our brother.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the family of the deceased, and be published in the Quincy Patriot.

By order of the Company,
WILLIAM H. SAMSON, Foreman,
HARRISON T. ADAMS, Clerk.

Voting List.—We have printed a few extra copies on thick paper, so as to accommodate those merchants who may wish for a copy to post in their counting-rooms for reference. Price, five cents.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS FOR MUTILATED SOLDIERS. Medical Director Abbott has issued an order directing that such patients as have suffered amputation of the leg shall, as soon as able, be removed to St. Elizabeth Hospital, at Washington, where they will be supplied with artificial limbs.

PERSONAL. We learn from Dr. Babbitt that Lieut. Col. H. B. Titus, of the 9th New Hampshire Volunteers who has been dangerously ill at Braintree from the effects of wounds received at the battle of Antietam, is recovering. The Ninth N. ## Poetry.

The Family Picture.

An old wife sat by her bright fire-side,
Swaying thoughtfully to and fro.
In an ancient chair whose creaking
Told a tale of long ago;
When down by her side on the kitchen floor
Stood a basket of worsted balls—a score.

The good man dozed over the latest news,
Till the light of his pipe went out.
And unheeded, the kitten with cunning paws
Rolled and tangled the balls about.
Yet still sat the wife in the ancient chair,
Swaying to and fro in the fire-light's glow.

But anon a misty tear-drop came
In her eye of faded blue,
Then trickled down in a furrow deep,
Like a single drop of dew;
So deep was the channel—so silent the stream,
The good man saw naught but the dimm'd eye-beam.

Yet marvelled he more that the cheerful light
Of her eye had weary grown,
And marvelled he more at the tangled balls—
So he said, in a gentle tone;
"I have shared thy joys since our marriage vow, Conceal not from me thy sorrows now."

Then she spoke of the time when the basket
Told a tale of long ago,
And now remained of the goodly pile,
But a single pair—for him;
Then wonder not at the dimm'd eye-light;
There's but one pair of stockings to mend to-night.

I can but think of the busy feet,
Whose wrappings were wont to lay
In the basket, awaiting the needle's time—
Now wandered so far away;
How the sprightly steps to a mother dear
Unheeded fell on the careless ear.

For each empty nook in the basket old,
By the hearth there's an empty seat;
And I miss the shadows from off the wall,
And the patter of many feet;
'Tis for this that a tear gathered over my sight;
At the one pair of stockings to mend to-night.

'Twas said that far through the forest wild
And over the mountains bold,
Was land where rivers and darling caves
Were gemmed with the fairest gold;
Then my first born turned from the door,
And I knew the shadows were only four.

Another went forth on the foaming wave
And dimm'd the basket's store—
But his feet grew cold—so weary and cold—
They'll never be warm any more—
And this nook in its emptiness seemeth to me
To give forth no voice but the moon of the sea.

Two others are gone towards the setting sun
And made them a home in its light,
And lady fingers have taken their share,
To mend by the fire side light;
Some other baskets their garments fill—
But none! oh mine is emptier still!

Another—the dearest—the fairest—the best—
Was taken by angels away,
And in a land of continual day,
Oh wonder no more at the dimm'd eye-light;
While I mend one pair of stockings to-night.

What Then.

After the joys of earth,
After its songs and mirth,
After its hours of sigh,
After its dreams so bright—
What then?
Only an empty name,
Only a weary frame,
Only a conscious smart,
Only an aching heart.

After this empty name,
After this weary frame,
After this conscious smart,
After this aching heart—
What then?
Only a sad farewell,
To a world loved too well;
Only a silent bed
With the forgotten dead.

After this sad farewell,
To a world loved too well;
After this silent bed
With the forgotten dead—
What then?
A chimney-sweep, having descended a wrong chimney, made his sudden appearance in a room where two men, one named Butler and the other Cook, were enjoying themselves over a pot of beer.

How now, cried the former, what news
from the other world?
The sweep perceiving his mistake, and recollecting the persons, snarledly replied:
"I came to inform you, that we are very much in want of a Butler and Cook."

A precocious youth in a country town, in this State, had arrived at the age of nine years, when his father sent him to school.
He stood beside the teacher to repeat the letters of the alphabet.

What's that? asked the master.
Harper, vociferated the archon.
No, that's A.
A.
Well, what's the next?
Ox-yoke.
No, it's B.
"Taut B, neither!—it's an ox-yoke."
Crotch all hemlock! gosh a mighty! I think
I don't know!

Mamma, said an inquisitive little lady of six summers, what makes the sea so hot in a storm?
Hot, my dear? mamma answered! what makes you think it is hot?
Why, mamma, I have just been reading about the boiling waves.

A man who had established a tipping shop,
was about to erect his sign, and requested his neighbor's advice what inscription to put on it. The man replied, I advise you to write on it "Beggars made here."

For the Patriot.

George Francis Train.

BY F. M. ADLINGTON—WEYMOUTH.

Thou poor unhappy thing,
As impotent as vain,
Who think to sing the Eagle's wing,
By fiddling Folly's Train.

Far, far, above your dangle hoop,
The eagle soars in light,
The bird of freedom will not stoop,
A hooting owl to smite.

But, rising in majestic power,
Emblem of Liberty,
Salutes the morn and bids the hour,
That makes a Nation free.

So far above your spinning ken,
Is Sumner's honor'd place,
Defender of the rights of men!
Contentment of the base.

Respected for his fearless truth,
The man without a stain;
Esteem'd by all, both age and youth,
Excepting Folly's Train.

The viper who would gnaw the file,
Might hope success the same,
As those with purpose mean, and vile,
To tarnish Sumner's fame.

Scraps.

You are told to have hope and trust, but that is a poor fellow to do when he can no longer get any trust?

The best sometimes err, yet still remain
the best; the worst do well at times, yet continue to be the worst.

An Oriental tale says God created the rose white, but that Adam having looked upon it as it opened, it was ashamed and blushed red.

People act first and think afterwards, taking care to reconcile their opinions to their conduct.

It has been said that the animal food supplied to our army is very inferior; but the soldiers declare that the beef is bully.

Death comes to a good man to relieve him;
to a bad one to relieve society.

Those who dare at first to think for themselves will, in the end, make others think with them.

Too much company is worse than none at all.

The difference between war and peace has been well defined by one of the ancients:—
In time of peace, the sons bury their fathers; in time of war the fathers bury their sons.

Lope de Vega, in describing an afflicted shepherdess weeping by the seaside, says that the sea joyfully advanced to gather her tears, and that, after having enclosed them
in shells, converted them into pearls.

A man excused himself for marrying by saying that his friends said he drank too much for a single man.

When we fancy that we have grown wiser,
it is only, in many instances, that new prejudices have taken the place of old ones.

Wives should know that tears as a means of influence are to be reserved for great occasions.

A minister, putting his hand upon a young urchin's shoulder, exclaimed: My son, I believe the devil has got hold of you. I believe so too, was the reply.

Why are two young ladies kissing each other an emblem of Christianity? Because they are doing unto each other as they would men should do unto them.

For life in general there is but one degree;
youth is a blunder; manhood a struggle; old age a regret.

A Dutchman having a friend hung in this country, wrote to his friends, informing them,
that after addressing a large meeting of citizens, the scaffold on which he stood gave way, owing to which he fell and broke his neck.

One of the greatest blessings you can enjoy is a tender, honest, enlightened conscience.

Miscellaneous.

A Mistake about Marriage.

When I was a little girl, I was a fat, merry, jolly dumpling, as happy as the day was long. Every body pinched my red cheeks, and I waddled about with my doll in my plump arms, finding fun in every thing, and fully believing that my doll was as sensible as myself; and perhaps she was, almost.

But though I had a natural antipathy to a spelling book, and had no fondness for spending a long summer's afternoon in poking a needle in and out of a bit of calico; though I considered patchwork all foolishness, and gussets as utter superfluities; though I was called a simpleton for asking my mother why she cut cloth up and then sewed it together again, still I was fond of picking up ideas after my own fashion. When the wise people around me supposed I was thinking of nothing but my play, my two little ears were open to every word spoken in my hearing; and many were the words impressed on my memory, which the speaker forgot the next moment.

When I was ten years old, I had one sister aged fifteen, and another seventeen; and, as usual with girls at that age, they had a set of cronies, some very like, and some quite unlike them in character. One afternoon, as I was tending my doll, Ophelia, who was sick in bed, I heard a brisk discussion among these girls, which, I may almost say, decided my fate for life.

The first words which caught my attention came from an animated, romantic girl of sixteen, scolding, because the heroine of a novel she had just read was left unmarried at the end of the story.

One of my sisters did not seem to sym-patize with this burst of disapprobation, and then came the pithy question:

What! would you be willing to die an old maid?

Mary said very quietly, yes; and sister
Ellen added—so would I.

Then such looks of amazement and incre-dulity. You can't mean what you say, cried
one. If I did not know you too well to think you a hypocrite, said another. Why it was meant that all women should be married, exclaimed a third.

Then why are they not all married? asked
Mary, with simplicity.

Eager and hot grew the controversy, and I lost not a word, while Ophelia lay flat on her back, her stiff old arms sticking out, and her crown quite forgotten. Then first did I take notice of that terrible combination of mono-syllables, "Old Maid." In how many different tones of contempt, dread and deprecation did I hear it uttered by those juvenile voices. What anecdotes came forth about cross old maids, and fidgety old maids, and ugly, and drowsy, and learned, and pious, and flirting, and mischief-making old maids!

Never did a bevy of regular fifty-year old spinsters utter so much scandal in one afternoon, as was poured forth by those blooming young creatures.

Two or three friends of my mother, whom
I had always cherished in my innocent affections, because they talked so pleasantly and were so kind to me, now appeared like new personages.

Miss Z. was so ugly, she never could have had an offer. Miss Y. dressed so shabby, and wore green spectacles to look literary.
And Miss A. was forever talking about Sunday School and Exeter Hall meetings, and so on.

You may be sure that the next time these ladies came to our house, I scanned every closely the face of Miss Z., a fact I had almost loved before; but now I saw that it was exceedingly plain. I looked hard at Miss Y.'s drab colored bonnet and shawl, perceived that they were old fashioned and ordinary, and that her green spectacles looked pedantic. Then Miss X. beside whom I had always squeezed in upon the sofa, encouraged by her kindly smile and delighted with her conversation; how uninteresting she had become!

They were all old maids!

It must be observed that my sisters—right good, sensible, domestic girls they were—had no part in this bewilderment of my young ideas. They were in the minority, so I took it for granted they were in the wrong. Besides, what children are ever as much influenced by what is uttered in the familiar voices in their own family, as by the words of comparative strangers?

I learned my lesson thoroughly, for it came to me in some shape every week. I read it in every novel and newspaper, and heard it from every lip. The very men who spoke truth and sense on the subject, sometimes neutralized it by an idle jest in some moment of levity, and the jest drove out the truth from my young heart.

At eighteen; I lived only for the ignoble purpose—I can not bear to say—of getting married; but what could have been the rich wish of one who had been taught by society to dread celibacy worse than death? I dare say I betrayed it in the ball room, in the street, every where. I dare say I was duly laughed at.

At last, quaking on the verge of six-and-
twenty, I had an offer—a most absurd one.
I was six years older than my lover, had ten times as much sense, probably, excepting on one point. I knew that he was rather wild, as the gentle phrase goes; in short, I neither loved or respected him; but I was willing to marry him, because then I should be Mrs.
Somebody, and should not be and old maid.

My parents said No, positively. Of course
I thought them unreasonable and cruel, and made myself very miserable. Still, it was something to have had an offer of any kind, and my lips were not hermetically sealed. I had several confidants, who took care that all my acquaintance should know the comfortable fact that I had refused Mr. S—

I went on with increasing uneasiness a few years longer, not seeking how to be useful, or trying to find out for what good purpose I was made. Neither was I looking for a companion who could sympathize with my better aspirations and elevate my whole character, for I had no right views of marriage. I was simply gazing about in anxious suspense upon every unmarried man of my acquaintance, for one who would lift me out of that dismal Valley of Humiliation into which I felt myself descending. Had I met Apollon himself there with the question on his lips, I believe I should have said yes.

At thirty-six I wore more pink ribbons than ever; was seen every where that a respectable woman could go, wondering why girls went into company so young; found I was growing sharp faced and sharp spoken, and was becoming old maidish in the worst sense of the word—because I was an old maid against my will. I forgot that voluntary celibacy never affects the temper.

My sisters, be it remembered, were older than I. They, too, were single. But they had lived more domestic lives than I, had read fewer works of fiction, had been cultivating their own natures, and seeking to make everybody around them happy. And everybody revered them, and loved to look upon their open, pleasant countenances;
I mean everybody worth pleasing; and they were very happy.

At last our good parents died, and left each of us a little independence. Within a year I was married.

I was married for my money. That was ten years ago, and they have been ten years of purgatory.

I have had bad luck as a wife, for my husband and I have scarcely one taste in common.
He likes to live in the country, which I hate.
I like the thermometer at seventy-five degrees, which he hates. He likes to have the children brought up at home instead of at school, which I hate. I like music and want to go to concerts, which he hates. He likes roast pork, which I hate; and I like minced veal, which he hates. There is but one thing which we both like, and that is what we cannot both have, though we are always trying for it—the last word.

I have had bad luck as a mother; for two such huge, selfish, passionate, unmanageable boys never tormented a feeble woman since boys began. I wish I had called them both Cain. At this moment they have just quarrelled over their marbles. Mortimer has torn off Orville's collar, and Orville has applied his cold like heel to Mortimer's ribs; while the baby Zephania, in my lap, who never sleeps more than an hour at a time, and cries
all the time she is awake, has been roused
by their din to scream in chorus.

I have had bad luck as a housekeeper; for I never kept a household more than three weeks. And as to cooks, I look back bewildered on the long phantasmagoria of faces flitting stormily through my kitchen, as a mariner remembers a rapid succession of thunder gusts and hurricanes in the Gulf of Mexico. My new housemaid bounced out of the room, yesterday, flinging her duster, and muttering, "Real old maid, after all!" just because I showed her a table on which I could write "Slut," with my finger, in the dust.

I never see my plump, happy sisters, and then glance in the mirror at my own cadaverous, long, doling visage, without wishing myself an old maid. I do it every day of my life.

Yet half of my sex marry as I did; not for love but for fear! for fear of dying old maids.

They have their reward. And those whose idle tongues create this mischievous fear,
and thus make so much domestic misery
have their responsibility.

Attached to the Married State.

It is usually considered a noteworthy circumstance for a man or woman to have been married three times, but of old this number would have been little thought of. St. Joseph mentions a woman who had married her twenty-second husband, who in his turn had been married to twenty wives! It might be said of this couple as was said of a soldier who had five wives—This soldier was much attached to the married state.

The Wisdom of the Age.

A man eats up a pound of sugar, and the pleasure he has enjoyed is ended; but the information he gets from a newspaper is treasured up in the mind, to be used whenever occasion or inclination calls for it. A newspaper is not the wisdom of a man or two men; it is the wisdom of the age—of past ages too.

A family without a newspaper is always half an age behind the times in general information; besides they never think much, nor find much to think about. And there are the little ones growing up in ignorance without a taste for reading.

Besides all these evils, the wife, who,
when her work is done, has to sit down with her hands in her lap, and nothing to amuse her mind from the toils and cares of the domestic circle. Who would be without a newspaper?

Common Absurdities.

To think you must win a law-case, because you have the law and evidence on your side.

To ask a merchant if the article he sells
you is of first quality.

To be a Smith or Brown, and think you have any distinct individuality.

To tell everybody what a dear wife you have got.

To tell a person of whom you would borrow money, that you urgently need it.

To fancy one must have a great stock of brains to be very successful in the world.

To make a foolish match, and then ask a friend's opinion of it.

To suppose that a man of sense will trust
you with a sixpence, after having seen you loquacious.

To think because you have been cheated
a few times, that you have really seen the elephant.

To think you must put your foot on the table, because members of Congress do.

To ask a man to return borrowed money
to you, and yet expect to retain his friendship.

A man has wronged you, and you expect him to hate you no more deeply than if you had wronged him.

You are half dead with ennui, and expect a friend's gratitude for a visit for which he is indebted solely to the fact of your being tired of yourself.

To say, after everything that happens,—I knew it was going to take place.

To tell a married woman that her young
luns are not the prettiest and best behaved you ever saw.

To think that the great difficulty in life is to find opportunity for the talent, and not talent for the plot.

To think that fogging school-boys makes them smart intellectually as well as corporally.

To poke yourself so much on your independence, that, when you think there is a sound reason for not doing a thing, you instantly do it, to show that you won't be coerced.

To say that you have no leisure, instead of that you have no disposition, for a particular study or pursuit. Where there is a will there is a way.

To speak of a man who has written two or three pieces of poetry, as a poet. A man cobbed two or three pairs of shoes—is he,
therefore, a shoemaker?

A Settler.

Some years since a black man called upon a clergyman in Western New York, avowed himself a fugitive slave, and asked for food and shelter, which were freely accorded.

Two or three persons being cognizant of the fact, called to see the runaway nigger, when the following interesting dialogue took place.

"Spoke you had plenty of hard times down South; liking a plenty?"

No—never was whipped.

Wa'n't! Well, you had to work most awful hard?

I guess your clothes were not very nice?

I was well clothed—a good house servant.
I reckon your victuals were not uncommon fine?

As good as I desired.

Well, I should give it as my opinion that you were a mighty big fool for running away from such a place as that, just for the sake of shirking for yourself.

Gentlemen, my place down South is vacant.
Any of you can have it by applying for it.

A Good Custom.

When a Spaniard eats a peach or pear by the roadside, wherever he is, he digs a hole in the ground with his foot, and covers the seed. Consequently, all over Spain, by the roadside and elsewhere, fruit in great abundant tempts the taste, and is ever free.—
Let this practice be initiated in our country and the weary wanderer will be blest, and will bless the hand that ministered to his comfort and joy. We are bound to leave the world as good or better than we found it, and he is a selfish churl who basks under the shadow, and eats the fruit of trees which others have planted, if he will not also plant trees which shall yield fruit to coming generations.

The Demijohn Church.

Old Judge L— of Alabama, kept a demijohn in his private office for his own comfort and the entertainment of his particular friends. The Judge had noticed for some time on Monday mornings his Jamaica was considerably lighter than he left it on Saturday nights. Another fact had gradually established itself in his mind: his son Sam,
was missing from the paternal pew in church on Sundays. One Sunday noon Sam, came in and went up stairs rather heavy, when the Judge halted him:

Sam, where have you been?

To church, sir, was the prompt reply.

What church, Sam?

Second Methodist, sir.

Had a good sermon, Sam?

Very powerful, sir; it quite staggered me.

Ah! I see, said the Judge, quite powerful,
eh, Sam?

The next Sunday the son came home rather earlier than usual, and apparently not so much under the weather. His father hailed him with:

Well Sam, been to the Second Methodist
again to-day?

Yes, sir.

Good sermon, my boy?

Fact is, father, that I can't say; couldn't get in; church shut up and ticket on the door.

Sorry, Sam; keep going, you may get good by it yet.

Sam says on going to the office for his usual Spiritual refreshments, he found the John empty, and bearing the following label:

"There will be no church here to-day
this church being closed for repairs."

Personalities out West!

A chap out West, named Barnes, who had made a speech at a war meeting, was criticised in the village paper, which said it was a very patriotic address, but the speaker
next day Lindley Murray, awfully.

The next day Barnes wrote a letter to the editor declaring that he never knew such a man in his life as Lindley Murray, and therefore could not have slandered him. Mrs. Barnes, the wife, being at a tea-party, also took up the cudgel for her husband when the matter was discussed, by declaring that Murray began it by abusing her husband, and got as good as he gave.

Proverbs Worth Preserving.

Death is the only master who takes his servant without a character.

A sour-faced wife fills the tavern.

Where pride and poverty marry together
their children are want and in crime.

Where hard work kills ten, idleness kills a hundred men.

Fully and pride walk side by side.

Friends and photographs never flatter.

Wisdom is always at home to those who call.

Don't Fret.

This is a world of ups and downs, of crosses and contradictions. Every day turns up something to disturb the unanimity of one's temper. But it is worse than useless to fret.

Fretting is like caustic applied to a sore. It inflames, but never cures. A fretful spirit is never happy, and it drives happiness from other spirits with which it comes in contact.

We say, then, if the world goes wrong—and it does that pretty often—don't fret. If a man cheats and then laughs at you for a verdant one, make the best of it and keep cool.

Fretting will only make a bad thing worse.
If you break your leg, or find your favorite seat at the Lyceum occupied; if the stage upsets, or the cars leave you behind; if the cook spoils your dinner, or the thick-headed servant mis-delivers an important message;

if the "dear image of its beautiful mother"
repays your caresses by thrusting its tiny fingers into your plate of soup and wiping them on your snow white bosom; if the bank fail and the state repudiate—keep your temper. Repeat the alphabet, read the hundred and nineteenth psalm—do and say anything of "lovely and good report;" but as you value

quietness of mind and the good temper of others—don't fret. It is marvellous how much good nature and patience do towards curing the ills to which flesh and spirit are heirs.

Meaner for God than the Devil.

A gentleman who had been much addicted to frolic and sports was converted, and became a member of one of our congregations.
The congregation had adopted the ad valorem principle, as a means to pay its expenses. In a few months after the gentleman's conversion, the deacons waited on him in order to make their assessments; and knowing that he was rich, and that his proportion of the expenses would amount to a pretty handsome sum, they feared he would not be willing to bear it, and their demand might give him serious offence, and prove an injury to him.

Hence they approached their business with some trepidation and great caution. At first he was at a loss to ascertain the reason of their apparent diffidence. The deacons perceiving this, became, of course more explicit.

The gentleman was surprised.

What on earth, said he do you mean? Did you suppose that I would be unwilling to pay my full proportion? When I was a man of the world and united in any scheme of pleasure, I would have deemed myself a mean man had I not paid my full proportion of the expenses. Go to the assessor's book and put me down for my full proportion of the expenses of the church. Do you think that I intend to be a meaner man now since I have become a servant of God, than I was when a servant of the devil?

Vatican.

Many who see this word may not understand its import. It is a pile of buildings covering a space of 1,200 feet in length, and 100 in breadth, on one of the Seven Hills in Rome. The site was once the garden of the barbarous Nero. Early in the sixteenth century, the Bishop of Rome erected there an humble dwelling. This has been added to by one Pope after another, until it is now one of the most spacious and magnificent palaces, stocked with paintings, statues,
books and antiquities of the rarest kind.

He is Dead.

Carelessly said of one with whom we have no connecting tie, except the great one of kindred humanity, but whom we have missed from among faces which surround us in our daily business life, and concerning whose absence we have therefore inquired: "He is dead," carelessly spoken, but to a reflecting mind awfully significant words, for they not only chronicle the withdrawing of a "unit from the sum of human existence," the ending of a life which to him who once possessed it was as dear as ours to us, but they awfully remind us that as certainly as we hear it spoken of a fellow mortal now, so surely, at some future

with the unexpected triumph, spoke out in clear, ringing accents, mindful of the previous victor:

Big Gal little gal-e-y.—Gallery!
It is needless to say that that effort closed the exercises in spelling, and literally brought down the house.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Nov. 1st, 1862.

Citizens.

Mr. Ezra Badger, whose recent decease near Washington, was mentioned in our last week's paper, was a well-known and highly respected citizen of the West part of Quincy for over thirty years past—having for a long period been engaged in the Granite business. He came with the late Solomon Willard to Quincy, before the construction of the old Granite Railway, in 1826, and ever cherished a deep interest for the prosperity of that growing portion of the town. He enjoyed the confidence and respect of Mr. Willard in a large degree until the sudden death of that good man in 1861. Mr. Badger ranking with the industrial classes, was a person of much general intelligence, and fond of storing his mind with useful knowledge; his tastes were refined and intellectual. But the prominent traits in his character were sterling integrity and a desire to be useful in the sphere of life in which he moved. Though not fortunate in the accumulation of property as many others, he was diligent in the laborious business that he pursued, and few there are who have ever toiled so hard and so long. He was an affectionate husband, fond parent, kind neighbor and honest man—an honorable and practical believer in the great truths of Christianity. In his domestic relations, he was peculiarly happy,—warmly loving, and being beloved by an amiable and extensive family circle. He was a true friend to our glorious Union, and died a soldier of the war in its defence. Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori.

The obsequies were solemn and impressive; a large concourse of sorrowing friends and neighbors followed his remains to the family tomb; an old friend and good citizen has passed away.

CORPORAL BIGELOW. Funeral services over the remains of Corporal Loring A. Bigelow, Co. B, 13th Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, took place on Sunday afternoon in the Unitarian Church in this village. Corporal Bigelow at the time of his death was 23 years and 10 months old. He was a native of this town, and a son of Mr. Jabez Bigelow, now absent in California. He was a most exemplary young man, and for several years had been in the employ of C. F. Hovey & Co., the members of which firm, together with some sixty of their clerks, attended the funeral in a body. The services at the church, conducted by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Wells, assisted by Rev. N. D. Gaylord, the Chaplain of the 13th Regiment, were very solemn and impressive. During his remarks the pastor, took occasion to refer to the integrity of the deceased, his affectionate disposition and his sense of duty to his country, which caused him to forsake the comforts of a good home and bright prospects for a prosperous future, for the trials, privations and fatigues of the soldier.

STATE ELECTIONS. Eleven States will hold their annual elections in November, to wit: Louisiana on the 3d, New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Michigan, Wisconsin, Missouri, Minnesota, and Delaware on the 4th, and Maryland on the 5th.

RISE IN THE PRICE OF PAPER. The Bridgewater Gazette, says, "We were told last week by our paper dealers that paper had suddenly advanced in price five cents per pound. This is sorry news for newspaper publishers, adding greatly, as it must, to the expenses of their business, and curtailing their already, in most cases, small profits. Subscribers to the Gazette cannot but see from this, that our ability to send the paper to those who are remiss in their payments, is much lessened; we hope, however, they will not force us to the disagreeable necessity of discontinuing it for this reason, but will square their accounts, and decide for the future, to READ THEIR OWN PAPER."

SNOW. The first snow of the season fell in Winsted, Connecticut, on Wednesday evening, of last week. There was, also, a violent snow storm at Cincinnati, on the night of the 25th ult.

POLITICAL MEETING. With scarcely any previous notice, there was a good attendance at the Town Hall last Tuesday evening to listen to the addresses by the Hon. William D. Swan, Col. J. H. D. Blake, and G. A. W. Chamberlain, Esq., being one from each of the three principal parties, that have for the coming election joined in the great uprising of the people.

IMPORTANT TO KNOW. Gov. Morton, of Indiana, in a speech made in Washington on Monday night, said if the rebellion succeeded it would be impossible for the remainder of the republic to hold together. Gov. Morton knows what the feeling is in the West, and sees that the East and West would soon be in conflict, as much as have been the North and South.

We have long felt the force of this truth. In losing the South we lose ultimately the West, and in losing that shall shrink ourselves again down into a dozen petty confederacies and small States. There can be no United States unless the old landmarks are restored: Constitution, Union, States, and all, "now and forever, one and inseparable."

TRANSPORTATION OF AN ARMY. Few persons have an adequate idea of the Herculean task of moving an army like that of the Potomac, with all their baggage, wagons and the thousand and one things which necessarily go to make up even the meagre comforts of officers and men, and animals in the field. In round numbers the animals alone of this army were 27,000; consider that schooners, used mostly as animal transports, carry but fifty or sixty horses or mules, without their wagons, &c., while others must take wagons, ambulances and tents, and of these fifteen or twenty each; and then add to this the number of vessels necessary to move forage for animals, subsistence for troops, ammunition and ordnance stores, and transports for carrying from five to fifteen hundred men each, and before all are under way the aggregate is not far from one thousand vessels of all sorts and sizes, from the canalboat to the splendid first-class steamer.

GEORGE PRENTICE'S OBITUARY UPON HIS REBEL SON. Mr. George D. Prentice, of the Louisville Journal, announces the death of his son, William Courtland Prentice, of wounds received during the attack upon Augusta, Kentucky, by a portion of the forces of the rebel General Morgan. He perished in the cause of rebellion.

After alluding to the many noble qualities of his misguided child, Mr. Prentice gives vent to the agony of his heart under this terrible calamity, in the following words:—
Oh, if he had fallen in his country's service, fallen with his burning eyes fixed in love and devotion upon the flag for more than three-fourths of a century has been a star of worship to his ancestors, his early death, though still terrible, might have been borne by a father's heart, but alas the reflection that he fell in armed rebellion against that glorious old banner now the emblem of the greatest and holiest cause the world ever knew, is full of desolation and almost of despair.

INTERESTING MERCANTILE QUESTION.—The question whether the semi-annual payments of interest on a mortgage note (the principal of which is not due) are each entitled to days of grace, was argued on Saturday before the full bench of the Supreme Judicial Court, on a bill of exceptions from Norfolk county in the action of Coffin vs. Loring.

The question is believed never to have been heretofore decided. The lower Court ruled that no grace was allowable, and entered judgment for the plaintiff. It is also understood that the banks have always heretofore practiced on that assumption. Should the decision of the lower Court be reversed, it will be of importance to all who deal in notes and mortgages to govern themselves accordingly.

There will be a FREE LUNCH of Good Things served up at the Hancock Saloon this Evening.

DECLINES TO BE A CANDIDATE. Mr. John Q. Adams, of this town makes public announcement that he is authorized by his father, Hon. Charles Francis Adams, to say that the latter gentleman's "ideas of usefulness and duty induce him rather to remain at his post than to desire any change of position, and he most explicitly declines to be a candidate before the people at this time for a seat in the Senate of the United States.

A POST OFFICE ROBBER PLEADS GUILTY In the United States Circuit Court on Saturday, James Brown plead guilty to four indictments charging him with breaking into post offices in Brookline, Braintree, Dorchester and Neponset. Sentence was deferred.

A SUPPLY. The excitement throughout New England a few weeks since, to furnish hospital stores, in response to the earnest appeals made by the Medical Department at Washington, has resulted in supplying them with immense quantities of lint and dressing, and therefore no more at present is required. The attention of the ladies should now turn to making mittens. Cold weather is coming on, and we shall soon have frosty nights, and the fingers of the soldiers will suffer unless provided with covering. Good yarn mittens are best liked, although a durable article can be made of stout firm cloth. Whatever they are made of, recollect to have a thumb and one finger to them.

FARE REDUCED ON THE OLD COLONY AND Fall River Railroad. We learn from Mr. Gay, Depot Master, that five tickets from Quincy to Boston, are sold at the Depot, for one dollar.

A NEW SCHEME. It is stated that the Government has under consideration a scheme for conveying contrabands to the coal mines in Pennsylvania, where there is a great scarcity of workmen.

STRAGGLING. It seems that officers present at the battle of Antietam estimate the stragglers who dropped from our ranks and fell to the rear while the columns were advancing on the enemy to be at least 15,000; and it is expected by those more immediately interested in the correction of this evil that the President will not longer, through a mistaken clemency, which is unjust to the brave men who bear the brunt of our battles, withhold his assent to the proposed order of the War Department, which will give to all commissioned officers the right to cut or shoot down any cowards who may be found leaving the ranks while in face of the enemy.

ESPECIALLY FOR THE LADIES. Extract from Hall's Journal of Health—"The feet are the most essential parts of the body to keep warm," to do this, you must wear only the best qualities of boots, and especially those having a thick sole. Such are to be found in this town "only" at George H. Cuming's New Shoe Store on Hancock Street.

FIRST QUALITY OF Boots and Shoes, new and fresh, sure to fit and give satisfaction to the wearer, can be found at George L. Gill's, 84 Hancock St.

ANOTHER REVENUE DECISION. Mr. Allen L. Howe, livery stable keeper of Dedham, having written to Commissioner Boutwell in respect to the tax on coaches, has been informed that "it was clearly the intention to tax each carriage of a livery stable keeper separately, and irrespectively of his license."

PLACES OF WORSHIP. Within a few weeks past four churches in Boston, belonging to other denominations, have been bought by the Catholics. The last one sold was on the corner of Washington and Castle streets, formerly occupied by Rev. Dr. Huntington, and belonging to the Harvard College Corporation.

POLITICAL. At a Democratic Caucus, held in the Lyceum Room on Wednesday evening last, Dr. William S. Pattee presiding, Mr. John Chamberlain was nominated as a candidate for Representative to the next General Court. ## To Ermit Growers.

Mrs. Stuart was as deep and tender an interest as if she had been my own sister, for she had been very kind to me since I became homeless and friendless; and before her death I had, amid sobs and tears, promised her that I would remain with her bereaved family till such time as the further wife and mother she herself had selected could be induced to come to them. The request and selection seemed strange to me then, but I did not question its wisdom or expediency.

The lost wife and mother was a very superior woman, and we all mourned for her sincerely; and as time passed away, I often wondered how the husband, who seemed to think of her so much, loved her so deeply, and Summer Dying.

BY W. H. C. HOMER.

Beauty is ebbing, a voice of complaining
Comes from the hill-side and dell;
Dying notes are ringing, and crickets are singing
To summer a song of farewell!
Day brightly closes, but where are the roses
June wreathed with her tresses of gold?
Soft winds are sighing, where daffodils are lying
Their rain-beaten leaves on the mould.

Sadness comes o'er me, for barren before me
Lies fields that I loved when a boy;
No more in shadows of oak on the meadows
Stout meadows their morning enjoy,
The stubble how lonely! weeds shooting up only
Where grain clothed the generous soil;
And reapers were swinging their cradles and singing
Rhythms strains to enliven the toil.

Cattle are wading where willows are shading
The low, shallow bed of the stream;
Threshed-down floating, is drifting down stream
That summer will pass like a dream,
The harvest moon, sailing through mist, is unveiling
Her disc like a blood-pointed shield,
White school-boy and maiden, their basket fruit-laden,
Have home from the blackberry field.

Dark swells of ocean, with long-measured motion,
Moan as they break on the shore;
Ary tongues waiting for beauty's cheek paling,
Chime in with the desolate roar.
Stars have grown dimmer, less dazzling in glimmer
Of the firefly's lamps on the lawn;
Flower-cups unfolding are honey-drops holding,
But light from the landscape is gone.

Throned on the thistle, the hawk-like whistle
Made cheerful the meadows of June;
Mead larks seem singing the morn with the fluting,
Replied to his rapturous tune.
Hoarse crows are calling, and first leaves are falling,
But still a mild loveliness reigns;
A sweet haunting sadness, though vanished in gladness,
And glory from nature, remains.

The Sanctity of Love.

I love! and Love hath given me
Sweet thoughts to God akin,
And opened a living Paradise
My heart of hearts within:
O from this Eden of my life
God keep the Serpent Shun.

I love! and into Angel-land
With starry glimpses peep!
I drink in beauty like heaven wine,
When One is smiling near!
And there's a rainbow round my soul
For every falling tear.

Dear God in heaven! keep without stain
My bosom's glowing dove;
O clothe it meet for angel arms,
And give it place for love!
For there is nothing from the world
I yearn to take, but Love.

Till Death.

Two hands held in one clasp,
Two hearts bound in one chain,
Two bosoms beating warm,
Loving, beloved again.
Two smiles of fervent faith
On each caressing cheek,
Two voices soft and low
As whispering angels speak.
Two figures kneeling glad
Before the sacred shrine,
Two vows of mutual love
Exchanged in sight divine.

Anecdotes.

A Yankee lad, whose father was a "down-East" farmer, went into the barn-yard to play a short time ago and being detained by a thunder storm, he fell asleep on a bag of guano. The old gentleman when the storm was over, went into the barn-yard to look after his son, and met a giant eight feet high coming out of the barn.
Hullo! who are you? cried he. What are you doing here?
Why, father! squeaked the Goliath, it's me.

Charles Bonister, the inveterate punster,
going into a coffee-room one stormy night
said, I never saw such a wind in my life.
Saw a wind, says a friend. I never heard of such a thing as seeing a wind; and pray
what is it like?
Like? answered Charley—like to have blown my head off.

Soon after the death of the poet Wordsworth, a man met a farmer of the neighborhood, and said to him, You have had a great loss.

What loss?
Why, you have lost the great poet.
Oh, said the farmer, he is dead, but ah
he no doubt 't will carry on 't business,
and make it as profitable as ever it was.

Ah, Sam, so you've been in trouble, eh?
Yes, Jim.
Well, cheer up, man; adversity tries us,
and shows up our better qualities.

Ah, but adversity don't try me; it was an old judge, and he showed up all my very worst qualities.

Ah! that alters the case.

Julius can you tell me how Adam got out of Eden?

Well, Julius, I s'pose he climbed ober de fence.

Well, den, he borrowed a wheelbarrow and walked out.

No, dat ain't it.

No, I gubs it up den.

He got snaked out. Yah!

New York, Nov. 6, 1861.

WM. GRAY, Esq., DEAR SIR:—Two months ago, my head was almost bald, and the little hair
I had was all grey, and falling out very fast, until I feared I should be bald. I commenced using your Hair Restorative, and it immediately stopped
the hair falling off, and soon restored the color,
and after using two bottles my head is completely covered with a healthy growth of hair, and of the same color it was in early manhood. I take great pleasure in recommending your excellent Hair Restorative, and you also may rest any doubting person to me.

Our State.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

The South land boasts its teeming cane
The pruned West its heavy grain,
And nature's radiant gates unfold
On rising marts and sands of gold!

Rough, bleak and hard, our little State
Is scant of soil, of limits strait;
Her yellow sands are sands alone,
Her only mines are ice and slate!

From Autumn frost to April rain,
Too long her winter woods complain;
From budding flower to falling leaf,
Her Summer time is all too brief.

Yet, on her rocks, and on her sands,
And wintry hills, the school-house stands,
And what her rugged soil denies,
The harvest of the mind supplies.

The riches of the Commonwealth
Are free, strong minds, and hearts of health!
And more to her than gold or grain,
The cunning hand and cultured brain.

For well she keeps her ancient stock,
The stubborn strength of Pilgrim Rock;
And still maintains, with milder laws,
And clearer light, the Good Old Cause!

Nor heeds the sceptic's penny hands,
While near her school the church-spire stands;
Nor fears the blinded bigot's rule,
While near her church the school.

Scraps.

A tradesman the other day would not pay
The carpenter's bill for a new counter in his shop, under the pretext that he was nothing but a counter-fitter.

Charles Lamb records somewhere that the housemaid caught him thrumming on the piano,
exclaimed in complimentary surprise,
that she thought it wasn't the cat.

Those who reprove us are more valuable friends than those who flatter us. The man who would improve must have either faithful or severe friends.

A preacher, in a funeral sermon on a lady,
after summing up all her good qualities, added, that she always reached her husband's hat without muttering.

A wit once asked a peasant what part he performed in the drama of life.

I mind my own business, was the reply.

The origin of all men is the same, and virtue is the only nobility.

A rich young lady should be an archer, for she can bend her beau as she pleases.

What key will unlock most men's minds?
Whiskey.

Whoever is honest, generous, courteous,
and candid, is a gentleman, whether he be learned or unlearned, rich or poor.

Not many years since, an official presented a bill of thirty dollars for placing boys (buoys)
at the mouth of Ann harbor.

It is well to be a man among men, and not a dreamer among shadows.

A sermon for the times is contained in the text: "Let him that hath no sword sell his garment and buy one."

Losses drive good people to their prayers,
bad ones to their curses.

The people of London, who boast of living in a realm upon which the sun never sets, live in a city upon which it never shines.

All men look to happiness in the future.
To every eye heaven and earth seems to embrace in the distance.

It is easy to exclude the noontide light by closing the eyes, and it is easy to resist the clearest truth by hardening the heart.

I'd just like to see you," as the blind man said to the policeman when he told him he would take him to the station house if he did not move on.

In good society, we are required to do obliging things; in genteel society, we are required only to say them.

If you ask an obstinate man to incline his ears to reason, he is very likely to incline them backward, like a horse bent to mischief.

Many persons enjoy the sunshine of the hour, like the butterflies of the wayside, thinking of nothing but the pleasures of the present.

Miscellaneous.

The Governess.

I was an orphan, poor, but well educated;
and had been for two years a governess in a distant cousin's family, when she was taken suddenly ill of a malignant fever, and in a few days passed on to a better land, the home of the blessed. Her next youngest child, a beautiful girl of seven summers, her parents' pride and my own pet and darling, soon followed her; and I was left comparatively alone with the bereaved husband and three motherless boys.

I had loved and nursed, and watched over Mrs. Stuart as she had been my own sister, for she had been very kind to me since I became homeless and friendless; and before her death I had, amid sobs and tears, promised her that I would remain with her bereaved family till such time as the further wife and mother she herself selected could be induced to come to them. The request and selection seemed strange to me then, but I did not question its wisdom or expediency.

The lost wife and mother was a very superior woman, and we all mourned for her sincerely; and as time passed away, I often wondered how the husband, who seemed to think of her so much, love her so deeply, and have such a holy reverence for her memory, could ever think of replacing her by another wife—which he seemed in no hurry to do.

Mr. Stuart was a merchant; a smart, energetic business man, who attended strictly to his own concerns, and when there appeared rather cold, prudent and reserved; but he had nevertheless,
strong domestic feelings and affections; was social and agreeable at home, and it had always seemed to be the delight of his life to add to the happiness of his family. He was wealthy and had plenty of servants; but it was something of a trial to me to assume, as I was obliged to do, the responsibilities of a mistress of a family. There were some symptoms of insubordination at first, but the quiet dignity I assumed soon quelled them, without reference to the master of the household;
and the children, who had been taught to respect me, generally yielded without difficulty to my request or commands.

They were bright little fellows, and missed their mother much; but we continued our lessons as usual, and as their father usually spent his evenings at home, read and talked with them, and interested himself in their studies and plays, we got along much better than I expected. Out of pity for their motherless condition, however, or some other cause,
he petted and indulged them more than usual,
which led them of course to take greater liberties with papa than they had ever done before.

It was early spring time when Mrs. Stuart left us, and the ensuing summer, autumn and winter went by, without bringing much of change to the household. We had little company, but though we still missed and mourned the lost one, the time did not pass drearily; for we had books and work and music and conversation to cheer and enliven us; and sometimes when less melancholy and abstracted than usual, Mr. Stuart, who had read and thought and travelled much,
would pour out some of the rich treasures of his intellect and memory for our benefit.

He was a grave man, middle-aged, some twenty years my senior, to whom I had always looked up with a distant respect, almost amounting to reverence; but I found after a while, that this pleasant and confidential intercourse was making a great change in my feelings and opinions of him. He seemed much nearer to me than when in imagination
I had placed him upon such a lofty pedestal,
and yet no less worthy of respect and confidence.

I learned almost unconsciously to miss him in his absence, to look and listen with eager expectation for his coming, and to feel a quiet happiness in listening to his conversation that I had never felt before, and as yet would not acknowledge even to myself.

After that memorable winter, when we spent so many long and quiet evenings together, I roused myself as from a dream, and began to wonder occasionally when the new wife and mother would be brought home to us—who she was, and how long Mr. Stuart would think proper to wait, before he made a move on the subject. I heard, too, about this time, some remarks made by the neighbors regarding my stay in the family that troubled me not a little, though I said nothing to Mr. Stuart on the subject.

I felt as if I must stay to fulfill my promise to the dead. I wanted to stay because it seemed like home to me—and I was happier
there than anywhere else; and yet it was as if, for my own credit's sake, I ought to leave them.

In this state of trouble and uncertainty regarding my future, a new member was added to the family, in the person of Charles Kingley, the nephew and former ward of Mr. Stuart, who had been for several years in the West,
and had now returned, partly at his uncle's desire, to assist him in the care of his business. Charles was a keen, lively, high-spirited young man, just about my own age, which was about twenty-five, and though he was gay and handsome, and I plain and sober, we were soon the best friends, and before long he gave me his confidence.

He had, it seemed, gone away some years before, because his guardian opposed his marriage with a poor girl of the village, who had since inherited a fortune; and one reason for his return was the fear, through some reports he had heard, that he was about to lose her forever. Many sought her hand, now she was an heiress, and one it was rumored, had won her favor; but I, who knew her well, did not believe this, and, in his doubt and uncertainty how to act, promised to intercede for and assist him.

His coming was a new era in our existence, for he was very kind to me and his young cousins; we talked and walked and rode with him, as we had not often done with their father; and at his desire, and perhaps from a certain restlessness of spirit that had come over me, I went into society more than I had ever done before. And there, poor and plain as I was, I attracted the attention of a worthy young man, who earnestly sought my favor.

Charles joked me, professed to be jealous,
and made all manner of fun at home; but I knew that he was rich and unexceptionable, while I was poor and homeless; and that I ought to think well before refusing him.—
And yet when urged to decide—I could not help it—my reply was in the negative.

About this time, too, Charles ascertained that Emily Baker was true to him; and I promised him one day that I would ascertain his uncle's present sentiments on the subject.
It was autumn again, and I was sitting that evening by the open window of the sitting-room, with little Eddie, a boy of five upon my lap, listening to his childish prattle, thinking of his father coming, and watching the bright-hued autumn leaves that were glimmering in the last rays of the setting-sun, when Mr. Stuart came up the walk and entered the house without seeing us. He looked more gloomy and desponding than usual, which was needless, as I had noticed for some time that he grew more melancholy every day. I felt that something troubled him, and I longed to comfort him, but what it was I could not divine.

He came into the room, and I was thinking
how I should approach the subject of Charles'
engagement to him, when he came up to me
and after looking at me gravely for a moment,
said, with a seeming effort:
I have been surprised by a call from Mr.
Hartwell to-day. He wished me to intercede for him with you, Cousin Eda, (they all call me cousin.) Is it of any use for me to do so?

None at all, I said, with a rising color.
But why not? He is a fine young man and very well off in the world.
I know it; and I respect and esteem him
for his many fine qualities, but I do not love him well enough to be his wife.
Indeed! Charles, then.
Is much more successful, I returned, laughing.

So I feared, he said quickly, with a displeased look and sudden change of color.
You still dislike it then? He has hoped that under present circumstances you would
at least oppose his wishes.

Nor shall I. I interfered with them once, thinking him too young to know his own mind upon so momentous a question, and I was sorry for it afterward. I do not blame him, and shall not oppose him now; and beside,
he is old enough now to choose and act for himself.

But he does not like to act without your concurrence, Mr. Stuart, and for my part if you will allow me to speak my mind I cannot see what fault you can find with Emily Baker.
I know her well, and consider her one of the finest girls of my acquaintance.

Emily Baker! and his face flushed, and his eyes lighted up with a sudden and joyful glow;—I thought it was yourself, Eda.
No, no; Charles and I like each other very well, but there has never been anything
of that kind between us.
Thank God for that! he exclaimed, impulsively.

The fervency of your thanks is very flattering to me, certainly, Mr. Stuart, I said with an angry flush, and a rising in my throat that was almost a sob, to think that he despised and considered me beneath an alliance with one of his family.

There was an awkward pause, broken at last by little Eddie, who had got down from my lap, and had been all this time playing with the 'bright leaves, and was now beginning in earnest to tear down the twining rose-vines.

There, don't do it, my son; you're always in some mischief, said the father, reprovingly.

But papa, mamma, used to let me pull the roses into the window, he urged.

But your mother did not allow you to pull down the vines, child.

Well, I'm going to have Cousin Eda for a mother, and she'll let me do as I please, said
the spoiled boy, regally.

Our eyes met—Mr. Stuart's and mine—
but mine dropped instantly, and with a face crimsoned with blushes, I rose to leave the room, when he suddenly caught my hand
with a look of eager inquiry, and said:

Is it in vain for me to hope for such a thing, Cousin Eda?

You—you—I thought—
What did you think?

That your wife had selected a companion
for you—a mother for her children, I stammered.

She did; and it remains to be seen whether the lady will accept of that position.
Is it not about time that you asked her?

I think so, he said, with deep emotion.
Will you be my wife, Miss Lydon, and the mother of my orphan children?

I—I am not the one she selected, said I tremblingly.

It is even so. You were her choice, Eda, when I felt as if I could not abide by it, and it was a crime to think of it; you are mine
now that I know you and love you so well as to have suffered unspeakable tortures during the past few months at the thought of losing you forever. And now that you have lifted that heavy cloud from my heart,
will you tell me truly whether it is possible for you to love one so much older than William Hartwell or yourself as I am, well enough to become my wife?

It is, I said, in a tone of deep emotion. I have loved you in spite of myself, Mr. Stuart,
I did not dream that I was the chosen one;
if I had I could not have remained here a day. I looked upon you as the affianced of another—had no thought of your asking me to become your wife, and yet I learned to love you so well that I dared not become the wife of another—dared not utter vows that I knew would be but a mockery.

God must have kept you for me, Eda, with such temptations, and I thank Him for his priceless gift of your affections. Make my happiness, and I will make yours, as far as human endeavors can do so, said he, solemnly.
We were married soon afterward, and so were Charles and Emily; and though there were some who caviled and wondered that I should take the uncle instead of the nephew,
after all the attention the latter had paid me,
and others who thought Mr. Stuart had descended immeasurably in wedding his governess, we were all very happy and very well satisfied with the arrangement.

The Best Advantage.

A countryman went into a store in Philadelphia not long since, and told the keeper that a neighbor of his had entrusted him with some money to be spent to the best advantage, and he meant to do it where he would be treated the best.

He had been very well treated by the traders, but he would not part with his neighbor's money until he had found a man who would treat him about right. With the utmost suavity the trader says:

I think I can treat you to your liking;
how do you want to be treated?

Well, says the farmer with a leer in his eye, in the first place I want a glass of today, which was forthcoming. Now I will have a nice cigar, says the countryman. It was promptly handed him, leisurely lighted, and then throwing himself back, his feet as high as his head, he commenced puffing away like a Dutchman.

Now what do you want to purchase? says
the storekeeper.

My neighbor handed me two cents when I left home, to buy him a plug of tobacco, answered the farmer, have you got the article?

The storekeeper stopped instantly, and the next thing that was heard from him was that his sides were shaking, and his face on fire,
as he was relating his sell to his friends.

A New Solution.

Not long since a certain quack, who looked as wise as an owl, was addressed by one of his patients thus:

Doctor, tell us how it is that when we eat and drink, the meat is separated from the crink?

Why, I will tell you, said the learned man of pills. You see as how there is in the neck two pipes, one of them to receive the meat, the other the drink. At the top of the pipe is a lid, or clapper, and when we eat, that clapper shuts up the drink pipe, and when we drink it turns back upon the meat pipe, a see-saw kind of motion. Queer apparatus I assure you.

But, doctor, said the patient, it seems to me that ere clapper must play a sharp game
when we eat pudding and milk.

Keeping Winter Squashes.

There is just one single rule for keeping winter squashes. Put them in a dry, warm place, and they will not rot. It is a warm, damp atmosphere, like that in most cellars,
that causes decay. A dry stone room or furnished heated room which never gets cold, or a closet near the fire place which never gets cool enough to freeze, are good places
in which to winter squashes and pumpkins.
They are also kept well, hung up in a basket or bags overhead in the kitchen, or on a hanging shelf. They should always be stored singly—never in piles—when you wish to preserve them a long time.

The Soldier's Respect for Woman.

One of the female nurses from Maine, who has been in active service now for more than a year, both in the field and in the hospital, states that during that whole period she has never had an improper or offensive word addressed to her, and never has received aught
but the most respectful attention from all in the army, privates, as well as officers. After one of General McClellan's battles, as she was at work in the field among the wounded, she approached a squad of Irish soldiers, who lay wounded, and waiting for the surgeons; as she came near she heard one of them, with the strong brogue of his people, turn to the others near him, and say, Ah Boys, here comes one of the Holy Marys to help us.—Portland Press.

A Slight Misunderstanding.

Oh, I loves you, like everything, said a young man to his sweetheart, warmly pressing her hand.

Ditto, said she, very gently returning the pressure.

The ardent lover, not happening to be overlured, was sorely puzzled to understand the meaning of ditto, but was ashamed to expose his ignorance by asking the girl. He went home; and the next day, being at work in the cabbage yard with his father, he spoke out—

Daddy, what's the meaning of ditto?

Why, said the old man, this here is one
cabbage-head, ain't it?

Yes, daddy.
Well, that ar's ditto.
Rot that ar' good-for-nothing gal! ejaculated the indignant son, she called me a cabbage-head, and I'll never go to see her again, and fortunately for the girl he kept his word.

Gentleman.

The word gentleman is evidently no mark of wealth or station. You are no gentleman, said a waiter in a tavern to a person who gave him threepence. Threepence more would have constituted the gentleman in the eyes of the waiter, and this threepence may have been withheld through poverty.

What sort of a person, said an individual to his landlady, is that who occupies your back parlour?

He is a tailor by trade, said she; but very much the gentleman.

This meant he paid his five shillings a week regularly. Thus it seems that the word is not confined by any regard to the station or trade of the individual. There is no doubt that we have all a conception of something when we hear of a man being a gentleman. If a man eat too heartily, he is not a gentleman; and if another have nothing to eat, he also is not a gentleman.

Truth.

Adhere always rigidly and undeviatingly
to truth; but while you express what is true, express it in a pleasing manner. Truth is the picture, the manner is the frame that displays it to advantage. If a man blends his angry passions with his search after truth,
become his superior by suppressing yours,
and attend only to the justness and force of his reasoning.

Truth, conveyed in austere and acrimonious language, seldom has a salutary effect, since we reject the truth, because we are prejudiced against the mode of communication. The heart must be won before the intellect can be informed. A man may betray the cause of truth by his unreasonable zeal, as he destroys its salutary effects by the acrimony of his manner. Whoever would be a successful instructor must first become a mild and affectionate friend.

Utility of Reverses.

Long afflictions will much set off the glory of heaven. The longer the storm, the sweeter the calm; the longer the winter nights, the sweeter the summer days. The new wine of Christ's kingdom is most sweet to those who have long been drinking gall and vinegar.
The higher the mountain, the gladder we shall be when we get to the top of it. The longer our journey is, the sweeter will be our end, and the longer our passage is, the more desirable will the haven be.

Civility is a Fortune.

Civility is a fortune itself, for a courteous man always succeeds well in life, and that when persons of ability sometimes fail. The famous Duke of Marlborough is a case in point. It was said of him by one contemporary, that his agreeable manners often converted an enemy into a friend; and by another, that it was more pleasing to be denied a favor by his grace than to receive one from any other man. The gracious manner of Charles James Fox preserved him from dislike, even at a time when he was, politically,
the most unpopular man in the kingdom.—
The world's history is full of such examples of success obtained by civility. The experience of every man furnishes, if we recall the past, frequent instances where conciliatory manners have made the fortunes of physicians, lawyers, divines, politicians, merchants, and individuals of all pursuits. To men, civility is what beauty is to women—
it is a general passport to favor—a letter of introduction, written in a language that every one understands.

Only a Penny.

The true secret of frugality is to lay up small savings. Most people never begin to save because they fancy they have not a sum worth saving. Begin with three cents.—
Now, this very day, and every day contrive to save a three cent piece. At the end of the year you will have $10.95. This sum would buy some good tools, or neat piece of household furniture, or useful article of dress, or a number of interesting books, and it would be a pleasure, too, every time you looked at what you bought out of your own penny savings. If you choose not to spend it, but to put it in the savings bank, in five years you would have over $50, which would be a sum that might help you many ways.—
Try it.

Bring Him Forward.

An old money-grab, in the city of Glasgow, who discounted bills for his friends, on promise to pay, and who held good back security in the shape of indorsements, was applied to by a friend to cash a small bill for him, when old Discount required additional security. The friend, who little expected a request of this kind, flew into violent anger.
Security, sir, I'll give you the devil for security!

Well, then, exclaimed the bill discounter,
just bring him forward; and as I never had seen the gentleman, get two decent men to say that it's really him, and ye'll get the siller.

Looking Ahead.

We once fell in with a business man,—
and he was a person of wide experience, too, who said that, whatever might happen to him, he always looked sixty days ahead, rather than sixty days behind. This was sensible; and there was profound philosophy in it; for the habit of looking on the dark side of matters soon begets a despondent feeling in the heart, and disinclines a man to make any exertion at all. To look forward to better days, however, and to a turn of fortune for better times, is naturally calculated to inspire one with enthusiasm, to stimulate one with the wine of hope. It makes all imaginable difference whether a man des-ponds or hopes. Hence, when a blast of trouble comes, the true way is to turn your back upon it, to refuse to have anything to do with it, to forewarn all connection with its threats or promises.

Look ahead, and look up! What is gone;
is gone; there is no help for it. Work for better fortune and the bad will desert you in absolute disgust at your impressibility.

Little Things Providential.

We are too apt to forget our actual dependence on Providence, for the circumstances of every instant. The most trivial events may determine our state in the world.
Turning up one street instead of another,
may bring us into company with a person
whom we should not otherwise have met;
and this may lead to a train of other events,
which may determine the happiness or misery
of our lives.

The Breath.

In a life of fifty years, a man makes upwards of five hundred millions of respirations, drawing through his lungs one hundred and seventy tons weight of air, and discharging nearly twenty tons of the deleterious carbonic acid; and a quantity of ten cubic feet of air per minute is required to supply him with the amount of oxygen necessary for the performance of this function; whilst the constant change of the atmosphere is evidently imperative to get rid of the products of respiration and the effluvia from the body.

Epics attend! One of those delicious Chowders will be served up at the Hancock Saloon this evening.

IN TRIBULATION. A Lowell soldier writes home that his greatest tribulation is darning stockings. He is proficient at the wash-tub.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 8, 1862.

The State election as we anticipated has resulted in favor of the Republican party. Governor Andrew is re-elected by some twenty-three thousand majority against thirty thousand last year. The contest has been one of much personal bitterness, which is always wrong in politics. With the exception of the popular vote for General Devens of some fifty-one thousand, the opposition strength is less than last year. The People's party has elected one Councillor, five Senators, and forty-one State Representatives, and one member of Congress, which is pretty effectually being left out in the cold by the Republicans. One thing is demonstrated, that Massachusetts is intensely anti-Slavery, and when Abolition is made an issue at the polls, it is sure to triumph. The recent elections in other States, as a whole, have been largely successful to the conservatives; but they have revived old party lines, which the first year of the war seemed to obliterate—and time will show whether the results are fortunate or otherwise. A divided North may have the effect to check somewhat the arbitrary assumption and exercise of extraordinary powers which have been too often and too lightly made by the Executive officers of the Government during the past year, and it may produce a healthy opposition. Aside from political wire-pulling, the great masses of the people in the loyal States are sound on the goose for Unionism, and any man or party is traitorous to the country who fails to stand by the General Government in all lawful and Constitutional methods to put down this rebellion by a vigorous prosecution of the war. From the day of Fort Sumter to the present, the American flag, that glorious emblem of our liberties, has been fired at and trampled upon by Southern rebels, and they deserve a just and severe punishment.

The course of Great Britain towards the loyal States has been detestable. The English people talk loudly of recognition; considering that the permanent separation of the South from the North, "as certain as any event yet future and contingent can be," England openly sympathizes with Secession, and contends that the Union can never be restored. She has done, and is doing, all she can to help the South of any real value, except declaring war against the United States, and is using her fleet and army with those of the Rebels to build and fit out piratical vessels to destroy our commerce; recognition means now a ridiculous form—neither damaging us or useful to our enemies.

The State election having passed, our country is quiet again, and business operations are very active. The financial market continues placid, and prices for the necessities of life are alarmingly high. Real estate, which has been depressed, is much sought after now for investment; and it is computed that it increases one per cent in value daily.

The city was active with military excitement on Wednesday; four Regiments arrived in Boston on that day, and their reception was grand and imposing. The Herald plays a just compliment to one of the ablest men of our country, as follows:

"Major General Nathaniel P. Banks, who has been spending a few days in Boston, has been the recipient of those attentions which his sterling qualities as a man and officer entitled him. General Banks is no ordinary man. He has fine executive abilities and a gentlemanly deportment. We do not agree with him politically, but are gratified to find men of all parties vying with each other to make his short visit to Boston agreeable and pleasant."

PARSON BROWNLOW writes a letter from Cincinnati, to a Philadelphia paper, concluding as follows:

"I have canvassed the entire North in defence of the Union cause, and in vindication of the present Administration, and I now propose to recanvass the whole in order to expose the villainy of its army officers, paymasters, swindlers and upstarts, who are eating up the substance of the Government."

ONE HUNDRED AND TEN YEARS. James Douglas, of Stony Creek, was born in Rhode Island, August 1, 1753, and is now in his one hundred and tenth year. He is rather below the medium size, and in such good health and vigor, that we see no reason why he should not continue to live a few more centuries. He persists in working like most old people, and in summer time walks about two miles every day to labor on a farm.—New Haven Journal.

THE TAX BILL. The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, (Forney) says of the operations of the Tax Bill: "Enough is known to enable careful observers to state that the Tax Bill, judging from the reports already received at the Treasury, will produce an almost incalculable revenue—a revenue sufficient to pay the interest on the public debt itself, and to leave a large margin for the necessary expenses of the Government as long as the war continues. One very competent authority states that the income derivable from the tax system will exceed by at least fifty per cent. the amount contemplated by sanguine framers of the Bill."

OIL IS GOING UP. Five hundred barrels of sperm oil were sold at New Bedford, on Wednesday, of last week, at $1.65 per gallon; and $1.75 is the price now asked.

The Ladies' Soldiers' Aid Association.

For the Patriot.

A few days ago the Ladies' Soldiers' Association of this town, sent a box to the Massachusetts Soldiers in the Philadelphia Hospitals, containing the following articles:

Twenty bottles barberry jelly; one box of fresh fruit; eight cans of barberry sauce; one can of pears; fifteen pairs of flannel drawers; fourteen shirts; twenty-six pairs of stockings; one box of corn starch; one bundle of groceries; three boxes of lint; thirty-two colored handkerchiefs; twelve pairs of slippers; eighteen towels; five vests; one dozen white handkerchiefs; four pairs of pants; three sheets; one pair of pillow cases; seven old bosom shirts; one pair of knit drawers; five pairs of cotton drawers; four coats; two pieces of old linen; two dressing gowns; one pair of leggings; six cotton shirts.

A. L. W. W.

The following letter has been received in REPLY.

PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER 6TH, 1862.

MY DEAR MADAM: Your box containing flannels, groceries, &c., arrived here to-day in fine order. I beg you would accept my most sincere thanks, and express the same to the Quincy Society, for allowing me the pleasure of distributing to our Massachusetts men the kind remembrance of their friends at home. The supply of flannels is invaluable. The demand is far greater than it is in my power to supply—even allowing only one suit to each man. I have had only fifty shirts yet, from your Society, Dedham and South Boston; and there are two or three hundred Massachusetts men in the various hospitals. May I hope for more flannel from you?

The delicacies I shall distribute immediately, and the grapes * * * will be very acceptable to the two very sick Massachusetts men. The stockings are very much needed.

My very kind regards to the Ladies' Aid of Quincy. I have long been a member of a similar society here, and well know how to appreciate their "labor of love."

With much regard and many kind thanks, I remain, truly yours,

SARAH A. FROST.

MORE SUBSCRIBERS WANTED. A Western editor announces the arrival of a twelfth responsibility at his house, and makes the following touching appeal there: "More subscribers wanted at this office."

HIGH PRICE OF PRINTING PAPER. The advance in the price of printing paper has been so great that the New York newspapers intend to advance the price of their sheets to agents and newsmen to two dollars per hundred. It is also understood that the papers in Boston intend to do the same. In addition to the advance in the price of paper, is the Government tax of three per cent. Paper is now selling at fourteen cents per pound.

CALIFORNIA RAISING HER OWN SUGAR.—Late California papers state that sugar and syrup, made from the Chinese Cane, and a better article than the imported, has been made in considerable quantities in the State. Tulare County will, no doubt, be able to supply her own population with sugar and molasses.

Summary of Intelligence.

Fifty pounds of oats, says the Scientific American, are more nourishing as food for cattle, than one hundred of hay.

The Quakers of Lynn, who declined to contribute to a war fund, have sent famous supplies of warm under clothing for distribution to the inmates of the hospitals.

Mr. Stephen Page, of Stony Creek, brought down eighteen quails from a flock of twenty, at one shot.

The Hingham mackerel fishers are doing a fat and flourishing business.

Vermont has sent the last regiment of her quota under both calls of the President, to the seat of war. She is the only State that has done so, except New Jersey, which has filled her quota without a draft.

The Governor General of Canada, by proclamation, has appointed Thursday, the 4th of December, a day of general thanksgiving for the blessings of an abundant harvest and the continuance of peace.

The number of contrabands in the District of Columbia, is seven thousand, and not forty, as stated. Of these, only six hundred and seventy-five receive Government rations, and the larger portion perform a certain amount of labor. The clothing is supplied from private sources.

General Banks is organizing in New York a great expedition, whose destination is supposed to be Texas. Its object is to assist the large number of Unionists in that State in restoring it to the Union.

Pekin and London are expected to be connected by telegraph within six months. A line through Russia, Siberia and Mongolia to the former city is being constructed by Mr. Reuter.

The cases of the Fall River Iron Works and B. C. Duffee, vs. the Old Colony and Fall River Railroad Co., which relate to an extension of the road to Newport, Rhode Island, have been postponed to January.

Last Monday the middle train between Boston and Plymouth was taken off for the winter.

The correspondence from Mexico shows that the constituted authorities there are making the best preparations in their power to resist further invasion of the country by the French.

Eight thousand signatures have been appended to the appeal from the women of the loyal States to the President, praying for the removal of incompetent army officers.

Aliens in the South seem to be losing faith in the Confederacy. On the 21st ult., no less than 300 applied to the British Consul for passports to go North.

The Government tax on the telegraphic dispatches to the seven daily papers in Boston amounts to $40 per week.

It is understood that the Government will order a different and much better paper for the postal currency, as that now in use is found to be totally inadequate for the purpose.

A New York City Judge has decided that no person convicted of criminal offence can be enlisted in the army of the United States.

Rubber Goods have lately been advanced 40 per cent. in price.

The traitor discovered in the war office is said to be James M. Wright, a confidential clerk in the Adjutant General's office. He lives in Prince George's county, Maryland.

The venerable Lewis Cass attained his eightieth year on the 9th ult.

The torn and tattered flag of the 9th Massachusetts Regiment, which has been borne triumphantly through thirteen battles has been received at the State House. This is the flag which was presented to the Regiment, (the Rough and Battle, Col. Thos. Cass, by the Irish citizens of Boston, on the 24th of June, 1861.

The London Daily News of the 6th has an article on the cotton supply, in which it argues that it is already evident that the world is to be supplied with cotton independent of the slave States of America.

The magnetic needle was used in China 1040 years B. C. The first compass consisted of a common needle, touched with a natural lodestone, mounted on a piece of cork and permitted to float in a bowl of eastern ware.

"Fine Cut" tobacco has advanced in price nearly 50 per cent.

The rise in the price of paper within the last few weeks is about twenty per cent.

ENGLISH IDEAS. A gentleman, lately returned from Europe, says half the people he met supposed North America was at war with South America, and he was frequently asked where the State of New England was.

COTTON IN KANSAS has ripened perfectly this year, producing a heavy crop of good staple upland cotton; and it was not grown by slave labor.

A REFORM. Jeff Davis has sent a special message to his Congress, recommending the consolidation of the diminished companies and regiments in his armies, in order to get rid of an excess of officers; an operation needed to some extent in our loyal armies.

A MISTAKE. Senator Hunter, of Virginia, according to the New York Tribune, made a blunder, and electrified the Rebel Senate some time ago, by inadvertently swearing one of the clerks to support the Constitution of the United States.

A Free Lunch at the Mariposa Saloon this evening.

TAKEN THE OATH OF ALLEGIANCE.—

Brigadier-General Edwin Price, son of Major General Price, of the Confederate Army, has taken the oath of allegiance to the United States. He was captured near Warsaw, Missouri, last winter, and since that time has been on parole. He was recently exchanged for Gen. Prentice, and after visiting the rebel camp at Grenada, Miss., returned to his home. He gives it as his opinion that the rebellion is nearly broken, and that the Confederate army can exist but a short time longer. He visited General Curtis's headquarters, and immediately on his return resigned his position under the Richmond government, giving his commission to General Curtis for the latter to send through the lines. After subscribing to the oath of allegiance, he announced his determination to observe it in both letter and spirit.

CALIFORNIA AND THE WAR. The Boston Traveller has received a recent San Francisco letter which says: Our Mayor has already sent to the Sanitary Committee one hundred thousand dollars, contributed to our citizens, and another one hundred thousand dollars goes to-day. San Francisco has done well for the sick and wounded, and will yet do a great deal more. The President's Emancipation Proclamation takes well in California. All our loyal people approve of it.

COTTON AT NEW ORLEANS. There is not a bale of cotton left in New Orleans, and no prospect of any receipts from the country at present. Twenty seven bales partly damaged by fire and water, sold at auction, a day or two since, at the extreme rate of $147 50 per bale.

GEORGE BAIGHT, a brother of the expelled Indiana Senator is a resident of Shelbyville, Kentucky. It was he who, when the rebels made a raid into that town, informed them of the trap which was laid for them.

A NEW ARTICLE IN THE MANUFACTURE OF PAPER. The manufacture of paper from the leaves of Indian corn is becoming extensive in Austria. The paper is said to be tougher than any ordinary paper made from rags, while it is almost wholly free from silica, which makes paper produced from straw so brittle.

OLD COLONY RAILROAD. The stock of the Old Colony and Fall River Railroad not only appears to be rising in value, but this also seems to be the case with regard to the property of the corporation. A gradual improvement is discernible in this respect.—Wherever changes are made, by the erection of new buildings, &c., as became necessary at South Braintree and South Quincy, the improvement is very marked, and although from the enduring material used, and plan, the outlay must be not small, doubtless it will be found much the cheapest in the end. The new cars recently put on the road are superb. For comfort, ventilation and lighting, we shall not probably see their superiors for some time to come.—Bridgewater Gazette.

BOYS' CADET CAPS; very pretty and fashionable; selling at George L. Gil's, 84 Hancock street.

Buried Griefs.

Oh! let them rest, the buried griefs,
Why should we drag them to the day?
They lived their brief and stormy shower;
They lived and died and passed away.

Oh! let them rest—their graves are green;
New life shall rise above the mould;
The dew shall weep, the blossoms peep,
The flowers of sympathy unfold.

So, on the solitary moor,
The soldier's graves are bright with flowers,
The wild thyme blooms, and sweet perfumes
Attract the roamers of the bowers.

There strays the bee to gather sweets,
And gives his humming trumpet rest;
There waves the heath its purple wreath,
And there the linnet builds her nest.

So let them rest—the buried griefs,
The place is holy where they lie;
On life's cold waste their graves are placed,
The flowers look upward to the sky.

Mechanics' Song.

Ye merry Mechanics, come join in my song,
And let the brisk chorus go bounding along;
Though some may be poor, and some rich there May be
Yet all are contented, and happy and free.

Ye Tailors! of ancient and noble renown,
Who clothe all the people in country and town,
Remember that Adam, your father and head,
Though lord of the world, was a tailor by trade.

Ye Masons! who work in stone, mortar and brick,
And lay the foundation deep, solid and thick,
Though hard be your labor, yet lasting your fame,
Both Egypt and China your wonders proclaim.

Ye Smiths! who forge tools for all trades here below,
You have nothing to fear while you snipe and you blow,
All things you may conquer so happy your lot,
If you are careful to strike while your iron is hot.

Ye Shoemakers! nobly from ages long past,
Have defended your rights with your aid to the last;
And Cobblers, all merry, not only stop holes,
But work night and day, for the good of our souls.

Ye cabinet makers! brave workers in wood,
As you work for the ladies, your work must be good,
And Joiners and Carpenters, far off and near,
Stick close to your trades, and you've nothing to fear.

Ye Hatters, who oft with hands not very fair,
Fix hats on a block, for a blockhead to wear;
Though charity covers a sin now and then,
You cover the heads and the sins of all men.

Ye Coach-makers, must not by tax be controlled,
But ship off your coaches, and bring us home gold;
The roll of your coach made Copernicus reel,
And fancy the world to turn round like a wheel.

Ye Carders, and Spinners, and Weavers, attend,
And take the advice of poor Richard, your friend;
Stick close to your looms, your wheels and your card,
And you never need fear of the times being hard.

Ye Printers! who give us our learning and news,
And impartially print for Turks, Christians and Jews,
Let your favorite toast ever sound in the streets,
The freedom of press and a volume in sheets.

Ye Coopers! who rattle with driver and adze,
And lecture each day upon hoops and on heads;
The famous old ballad of Tore in a tub,
You may sing to the tune of your rub a dub dub.

Ye Ship-builders, Riggers, and Makers of Sails, Already the New Constitution prevails!
And soon ye shall see o'er the proud swelling tide,
The ships of Columbia triumphantly ride.

Each Tradesman turn out with his tool in his hand,
To cherish the Arts and keep pace through the land.
Each Apprentice and Journeyman join in my song,
And let the brisk Chorus go bounding along.

Anecdotes.

An Irishman, being about to enter the army, was asked by one of the recruiting officers: Well, sir, when you get into battle, will you fight or run?
Ah, faith, replied the Irishman, with a comical twist of the countenance, I'll be after doing yer honor, as the majority of ye does!

A gentleman once introduced his son to Rowland Hill, by letter as a child of great promise, and as likely to do honor to the University of which he was a member. But he is shy, added the father, and idle; and I fear he buries his talents in a napkin. A short time afterward the parent, anxious for the Reverend gentleman's opinion, inquired what was thought of his son?
I have shaken the napkin, said Rowland Hill, at all corners and there is nothing in it.

I hope my little daughter, said a mother, one morning, that you will be able to control your little temper to-day.
Yes, mother, and I hope you will control your big temper!

Sal, cried a girl looking out of the upper story of a small grocery window, addressing another girl who was trying to enter at the front door, we've all been converted; so when you want milk on Sunday, you'll have to come in the back way.

I gave him a good bit of my mind, said a son one day.
That was very generous, whispered a wag to a friend, for I know the fellow has none to spare.

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR Spermatorrhea, or seminal Weakness, and Gonorrhea, or venereal disease.

This Malady, the terrible consequences of which are too well known to require more than a bare allusion to them, is one of the most insidious, and therefore dangerous of all the long catalogue of human ills. From one to six boxes of the SPECIFIC PILLS are sufficient to effect a permanent cure in the most Aggravated Cases, whether Constitutional, or arising from Abuse or Excess.

MEDICAL TESTIMONY.
We believe it to be, in the treatment of Spermatorrhea, as near a SPECIFIC as any medicine can be.—B. Keith, M. D. [Am. Journal of Medical Science.]

The Voiceless.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

We count the broken links that rest Where the sweet wailing singers slumber,— But o'er their silent sister's breast

The wild flowers who will stoop to number! A few can touch the magic string,

And noisy fame is proud to win them;— Alas for those that never sing

But die with all their music in them! Nay, grieve not for the dead alone,

Whose song has told their heart's sad story, Weep for the voiceless, who have known

The cross without the crown of glory! Not where Lucan's breezes sweep

O'er Sappho's memory-haunted pillow, But where the gliding night-dews weep

On nameless sorrow's churchyard pillow. O hearts that break and give no sign

Save whitening lip and fading tresses, Till death pours out his cordial wine

Sling dropped from misery's crushing presses, If singing breath or echoing chord

To every hidden pang were given, What endless melodies were poured,

As sad as earth, as sweet as heaven!

Scraps.

"I feel," said an old lady, "that I've got about through with this world. I shan't enjoy much more trouble."

I have frequently seen men and women of superior culture and extraordinary intellect eclipsed in conversation by one whose talk was made up of delightful nothings strung on the merest raveling of a thought.

A lady in Michigan, consoling her neighbor for the loss of her son, was answered in tears, "If Billy's grandmother is in Heaven, I know she won't see Billy abused."

There is a great difference between what an ambitious man is and what he aspires to be, as between what a vain one is and what he thinks himself.

The great source of pleasure is variety. We love to expect; and when expectation is disappointed or gratified, we want to be again expecting.

The greater part of human suffering consists in its anticipation and recollection.

Pride of birth is the most ridiculous of all vanities. It is like roasting the root of a tree, instead of the fruit it bears.

If a young woman's disposition is like powder, the sparks should be kept away from her.

Why are indolent persons' beds too short for them? Because they are too long in them.

Stones and idle words are things not to be thrown at random.

If it is important for you to know whether a man will cheat if he can, sound him as to his willingness to help you to cheat somebody else.

Bolts can sing and whistle, but they are not pleasant musicians.

A wise man may be pinched by poverty, but only a fool will let himself be pinched by tight boots.

Grapple with adversity; and as you do not know when adversity may happen along, keep your grappling irons always ready.

It is better to look round on prosperity than back on glory.

A pretty woman's soul sometimes sits and looks out through a bright eye, like a poring cat out of a sunny window.

If you want to be suited, go to a good tailor; if you want to be non-suited, go to law.

We commence by being in love with our own thoughts, and follow by seeking to make others worship them.

He who has a good son-in-law has found a child; he who has a bad one has lost a daughter.

When the price of a thing is inquired now-days, the phrase is "What's the postage on that?"

Husbands and letter paper should always be well ruled.

A man's trials cannot be insufferable if he lives to talk about them.

When we think of good, the angles are silent; when we do they rejoice.

A man's boots and shoes get tight by imbibing water, but the man doesn't.

Miscellaneous.

How to Save.

The new tariff and tax will cut out large slices from incomes that have been small enough hitherto. How to keep the wolf from the door will be a problem carefully studied by many anxious hearts. The following pleasant story may furnish good suggestions for some of our readers:

Charles Lynford was a good mechanic in good business. At the age of twenty-six he had taken to himself a wife, Caroline Eustice, the daughter of a neighbor, who had nothing to bring him but her own personal merits, which were many, and habits of thrift learned in an economical household, under the stern teachings of necessity.

It was well, perhaps, that Charles Lynford should obtain a wife of this description, as he himself found it very difficult to save anything from his income.

It was not long before Caroline became acquainted with her husband's failing. She could not feel quite easy in the knowledge that they were living fully up to their income, foreseeing that a time would come when their family would grow more expensive, and perhaps her husband's business, though now flourishing, might become less so.

Accordingly, one day, she purchased of a tin pedler who came to the door, a little tin safe, such as children frequently use as a savings' bank. This she placed conspicuously on the mantel piece, so that her husband might be sure of seeing it on entering.

Hallo, Carrie, what's that, eh? he asked curiously.

Only a little purchase I made to day, said his wife.

But what is it meant for? he asked again. Let me illustrate, said his wife, playfully. Have you a ten cent piece about you?

Charles drew a dime from his waistcoat pocket. His wife, taking it from his hand, dropped it into the box through a little slit in it at the top.

Charles laughed.

So you have taken to hoarding, Carrie? My wife become a miser!

No, only a little prudent. But seriously, Charles, that is what I want you to do every night.

What—drop a dime into this new fangled arrangement of yours?

Exactly.

Very well, that will be easy enough. A dime is no great harm. But may I know what you are going to do with this newly commenced hoard?

Lay it by for a rainy day, answered Caroline.

Charles laughed merely.

This ended the conversation for the time.

The plan thus inaugurated by the young wife was steadily carried out. She was not one of those—of whom there are so many—who enter upon a plan zealously, but soon tire of it. In the present case, she was fully satisfied of the wisdom of her purpose, and resolved to carry it through. Every morning she called upon her husband for a dime, and every morning it was added to the accumulation. Frequently he had not the right change, but would toss her a quarter instead. She would assure him laughingly, that it would answer her purpose just as well.

More than once Charles bantered her on the subject of her savings' bank. This she bore easily.

But these were not the only accessions the fund received. Her husband had early arranged to make her an ample allowance for dress—I say ample, though I dare say some of my city readers might not have considered it so; but Caroline, who was in the habit of making her own dresses, provided herself with a good wardrobe at much less expense than some not so well versed in the science of managing could have done.

After considerable calculation she came to the conclusion that out of her allowance she should be able to make a daily deposit equal to that she had exacted from her husband. Of this, however, she thought it best, on the whole, not to inform Charles, enjoying in anticipation the prospect of being able at some future time to surprise him with the unexpected amount of her savings.

At the close of every month the tin box was emptied and the contents transferred to a savings' bank of more pretensions, where interest would be allowed.

When the sums deposited here became large enough, Mrs. Lynford, who had considerable business capacity, withdrew them, and invested in bank and other stocks, which would yield a larger per cent. Of her mode of management her husband was in complete ignorance. Nor did he ever express any desire to be made acquainted with his wife's management. He was an easy, careless fellow, spending as he went, enjoying the present, and not having any particular concern about the future.

At the end of eight years, during which time he had been unusually favored with prosperity in business and uninterrupted health, his books showed that he had not exceeded his income—but that, on the other hand, he had saved absolutely nothing.—Twenty-five cents stood to his credit.

Running pretty close, ain't it, Carrie? I take credit to myself, though, for keeping on the right side of the line. But then I suppose you have saved up an immense sum?

How much do you suppose? asked his wife.

Perhaps a hundred dollars, said Charles Lynford, carelessly, though it would take a good many dimes to make that.

His wife smiled, but did not volunteer to enlighten him as to the correctness of his conjecture. So things went till at length came the panic of 1857—a panic so recent that it will be remembered how universally trade and business of every kind were depressed at this period—among others, the trade which occupied Charles Lynford suffered.

One evening he came home looking quite serious—an expression which seldom came over his cheerful face.

Caroline who had watched the signs of the times, was not unprepared to see this. She suspected that her husband's business was affected.

What is the matter, Charles? she asked, cheerfully.

The matter is, that we will have to economize greatly.

Any thing unfavorable turned up in business matters?

I should think there had. I will have but half a day's work for some time to come, and I am afraid that even this will fail before long. You haven't an idea, Carrie, how dull every kind of business has become.

I think I have, said his wife, quietly, I have read the papers carefully, and have been looking out for something of this kind.

Do you think we can reduce our expenses one half? asked the husband, doubtfully.

I think we will be able to do so. Both of us are well supplied with clothing, and will not need any more for a year at least. This will cut off considerable expense. Then there are a great many little superfluities you are accustomed to buy—little things which you are kind enough to bring home to me frequently, which I can do very well without. Then we can live more plainly—have less pies and cakes; and I have no doubt it will be an improvement as far as health is concerned.

What a calculator you are, Carrie, said her husband, feeling considerably easier in mind. I really think after all you have said that it won't be hard to live on half of our usual income—for the present, at least. But, and his countenance again changed, suppose my work should entirely fail; I suppose you couldn't reduce our expenses to nothing at all, could you?

That certainly surpasses my powers, said his wife, smiling; but even in this case, there is no ground for discouragement. You have not forgotten our savings' bank, have you?

Why no, I didn't think of that, said her husband, I suppose that would keep off starvation for a few weeks.

His wife smiled.

And in those few weeks, she added, business might revive.

To be sure, said her husband. Well, I guess it will be all right; I will try not to trouble myself about it any longer.

The apprehensions to which Charles Lynford gave expression proved to be only too well founded. In less than a month from the date of the conversation just recorded, the limited supply of work he had been able to secure, failed, and he found himself without work of any kind, thrown back upon his own resources.

Although he had anticipated this, it seemed unexpected when it really did come upon him, and again he returned home in a fit of discouragement. He briefly explained to his wife the new calamity which had come upon them.

And the worst of it is, he added, there will be no better times till spring.

Do you think that the business will revive then?

It must by that time. But there are five or six months between. I do not know how we are going to live during that time.

I do, replied his wife, quietly.

You, exclaimed her husband, in surprise. Yes, your income has never been more than six or seven hundred dollars a year, and I have no doubt we can live six months on two hundred and fifty dollars.

Yes, certainly, but where is that money to come from? I don't want to get in debt, and if I did I should not know where to borrow.

Fortunately, there is no need of it, said Mrs. Lynford. You seem to forget our little savings' bank.

But is it possible it can amount to two hundred and fifty dollars? he asked in surprise.

Yes, and six hundred more, said his wife. Impossible!

Wait a minute and I'll prove it.

Caroline withdrew a moment, and reappeared with several certificates of bank and railroad shares, amounting to eight hundred dollars and a book in which the balance was deposited to her credit.

Are you sure you haven't had a legacy? demanded Charles, in amazement. Surely a dime a day would not produce this.

No, but two dimes a day have, with a little extra deposit, now and then. I think, Charles, that we can ward off starvation for a time.

All this I owe to your prudence, said Charles, gratefully. How can I repay you?

Charles Lynford remained out of employment some months. But in the spring, as he anticipated, business revived, and he was once more in receipt of his old income. More than two-thirds of the fund was still left, and henceforth Charles was not less assiduous than his wife in striving to increase it.

The little tin savings' bank stands on the mantel piece, and never fails to receive a deposit daily.

An Editorial Brutus.

An editor, out West thus talks to his non-paying subscribers and patrons:

"Hear us for our debts, and get ready that you may pay; trust us, we are in need, and have regard for our need, as you have been long trusted; acknowledge your indebtedness, and dive into your pockets, that you may promptly fork over. If there be any among you—one single patron—that don't owe us something, then to him we say, step aside—consider yourself a gentleman. If the rest wish to know why we dun them, this is our answer: not that we care for ourselves, but our creditors do. Would you rather that we went to jail, and you go free, than you pay your debts to keep us moving? As we agreed, we have worked for you; as we contracted, we have furnished our paper to you; but as you don't pay, we dun you. Here are agreements for job work, contracts for subscriptions, promises for long credits, and duns for deferred payment. Who is there so green that he don't take our paper? If any, he need not speak, for we don't mean him. Who is there so green that he don't advertise? If any, let him slide, he ain't the chap neither. Who is there so mean that he don't pay the printer? If any, let him shout, for he's the man we're after. His name is Legion, and he's owing us for one, two, three, four, five, six years—long enough to make us poor and him rich at our expense."

Home After Business Hours.

The road along which the man of business travels in pursuit of competence or wealth, is not a macadamized one, nor does it ordinarily lead through pleasant scenes and by well-springs of delight. On the contrary, it is a rough and rugged path, beset with "wait-a-bit" thorns, and full of pitfalls, which can only be avoided by the watchful care of circumspection. After every day's journey over this worse than rough turnpike road, the wayfarer needs something more than rest; he requires solace—and he deserves it. He is weary of the dull prose of life, and thirsts for the poetry. Happy is that business man who can find that solace and that poetry at home. Warm greetings from loving hearts, fond glances from bright eyes, the welcome shouts from children, the many thousand little arrangements for our comfort and enjoyment, that silently tell of thoughtful and expectant love, the gentle ministrations that disencumber us into an old and easy seat before we are aware of it; these, and like tokens of affection and sympathy, constitute the poetry which reconciles us to the prose of life. Think of this, ye wives and daughters of business men! Think of the toils, the anxieties, the mortifications and wear that fathers undergo to secure for you comfortable homes, and compensate them for their trials by making them happy by their own fireside.

Home Comforts.

Wealth is not essential to neatness. We have visited a large, showy house in disorder from cellar to garret; nothing homelike, nothing inviting; and, on the other hand, we have seen a low, log cottage, whitewashed outside, and embowered with roses, a model of neatness and comfort inside, with its white window-curtains, and every article of furniture handsomely arranged. This was owing to the excellent housewife. But while skill and labor within are so important in this great element of high civilization, namely, home comfort, the surroundings of the house, under the care of the owner, should never, for a day, be forgotten. Remember—the highest mark of civilization is attention to domestic comforts, domestic happiness, and to elevating the condition and character of the female members of the family.

Mental Excitement.

Bad news weakens the action of the heart, oppresses the lungs, destroys the appetite, stops digestion, and partially suspends all the functions of the system. An emotion of shame flushes the face; fear blanches it; and an instant thrill electrifies a million of nerves. Surprise spurs the pulse into a gallop. Delirium infuses great energy. Volition commands, and hundreds of muscles spring to execute. Powerful emotion often kills the body at a stroke. Eminent public speakers have died in the midst of an impassioned burst of eloquence, or when the deep emotion that produced it suddenly subsided.

The Thankful Heart.

If one should give me a dish of sand, and tell me there were particles of iron in it, I might look for them with my eyes, and search for them with my clumsy fingers, and be unable to detect them; but let me take a magnet and sweep through it, and how would it draw to itself the almost invisible particles by the mere power of attraction! The unthankful heart, like my finger in the sand, discovers no mercies, but let the thankful heart sweep through the day, and as the magnet finds the iron, so it will find in every hour some heavenly blessings; only the iron in God's sand is gold.—O. W. Holmes.

A Strange Drink.

An old toper bet that he could, when blind-folded, tell each of several kinds of liquor. When brandy, whisky, gin and other drinks were presented to him, he pronounced correctly what they were. At length a glass of pure water was given him; he tasted it, paused, tasted it again, considered, and shook his head. He at last said—"Gentlemen, I give it up; I am not used to that sort of liquor."

To-day and To-morrow.

Half the griefs of the world are ideal. No matter to what rank of life a man belongs, unless he possesses a remarkable contented quality of mind, he is perpetually annoyed with small sorrows, arising from the anticipation of evils which, in fact, never come to pass. At the end of any year, he can look back, if he choose, and count his hours by the score, spent in this manner over ideal misfortunes. It is exactly the same thing with our moments of happiness; for man never is, but always to be blest; and how much of our enjoyment is occasioned by the expectation of pleasurable events which always fail to occur.

A certain bishop once said to a sprig of nobility, who asked for the loan of a rural villa the reverend gentleman never used: "Sir, don't you know it is necessary to have a place where you never go—a place in which you fancy you might be ever happy, if you were there, but from which you absent yourself because you won't be?" And the bishop in that remark announced a great truth; for delight, as well as sorrow, lies too much in what is never realized.

Common sense, fair reader, ought to take a solid hint from this fact. In children's language, "never grieve over spilt milk," and never over what may occur. The past is irretrievable, and the future brings trouble enough of its own. Enjoy the present in its innocence as far as circumstances will permit. To-day is certainly yours, to-morrow may not be.

His Last Words.

and all the characteristics of goodness, with which to answer the summons to call us hence. Lovely attributes in life secure them in death. And as the green leaves in the fullness of their life sheltered us from the scorching heat of the noontide sun, and in death robed themselves in all the richness of a radiant coloring of beauty, so let them typify the usefulness of our own existence and the beauty of death in the good.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Nov. 15th, 1862.

"Born to no Master, of no Sect are we"

A Generous Donation.

We are pleased to learn that Judge White has recently presented to the High School of this town, "Appleton's New Cyclopaedia," consisting of sixteen large volumes, which contain more than twelve hundred pages. The authors of this work have aided by about one hundred of the best writers upon the various subjects of which it treats. "It aims exclusively at an accurate and impartial account of the development of opinion in the exercise of thought, of the results of physical research, of the prominent events in the history of the world, of the most significant productions of literature and art, and of the celebrated individuals, whose names have become associated with the conspicuous phenomena of their age."

We are glad that the Chairman of our School Committee has, at his own expense, placed these valuable volumes in the hands of the pupils of our High School.

A MYSTERY. We learn, through the kindness of Coroner Lewis Bass, that the remains of a female, apparently about twenty years of age, were found by Mr. Belcher, on the beach, near his residence, at Hough's Neck, on Saturday last, enclosed in a box two and a half feet long, one and a half wide, and one and a half high. The flesh was all consumed except some fatty substance, and not a particle of clothing was found. It is evident that the person could not have been placed in the box without having been mutilated. The box had probably been several months in the water, to which was originally attached some heavy substance to cause it to sink, but which was at last separated by the action of the tide, and floated to the shore.

Charles S. French, Albert Thayer, W. M. French, George Savit, Charles Spear and Nathan G. Glover served as a Jury of Inquest, and rendered the following verdict:—"That she came to her death several months since by violence inflicted by some person, or persons, to them unknown."

The remains have been deposited in the receiving tomb in this town for identification.

WORKMEN FOR FLORIDA. One hundred mechanics and laborers left Boston on Monday, to proceed to Fort Clinch, Fernandina, Florida. They take a Government vessel from New York direct for Florida, and are in charge of William P. Lunt, son of the late Rev. Dr. Lunt, of this town, who has lately received an appointment in the Engineer Department of the Government service at Fort Clinch.

LAUNCH. A beautiful ship of one thousand tons burden, built during the past summer at Quincy Point by Mr. Thomas, was launched on Monday afternoon last.

CROWDED OUT. We have received some very appropriate lines on the death of Corp. Bigelow, but for want of room we are obliged to defer publishing them until next week.

THE NEW COMMANDER. Major General Ambrose Everett Burnside, the new Commander of the Army in Virginia, was born at Liberty, Indiana, in 1824, and is therefore but thirty-eight years old. He graduated at West Point in 1847, and immediately joined the artillery of the regular army. In 1847 he became a lieutenant in Bragg's Battery, with which he served in the Mexican war. He left the army in 1852, and lost money in a patent rifle of his own invention. Subsequently he was with General McClellan on the Illinois Central railroad, where he was president of the land office department. He was in New York, acting as treasurer of the Central railroad when the war broke out. He accepted the Colonels of the first Rhode Island volunteers, and acted as Brigadier General at Bull Run. His subsequent career as the successful head of the Roanoke expedition to North Carolina is familiar. General Burnside is an officer of fine personal appearance, a good disciplinarian, and a man of great vigor and courage.

TOBACCO. Just now the civilized nations of the world derive their chief revenue from tobacco. Without it, the Pope would be bankrupt in a month. Last year the English Government derived $28,000,000 revenue, and the French $36,000,000 from the weed that vanishes in smoke. The greatest part of the tobacco which yields to foreign powers their chief revenue is grown in America.

PROVIDENCE RIVER OYSTERS. These superior Bivalves, can be found at the Hancock Saloon.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, November 13, 1862.

The removal of General McClellan from the command of the army of the Potomac has been the prominent subject of conversation here for some days past, and continues to be. We are at present much in the dark as to the causes that induced the President to remove McClellan. The facts in the case must soon come out, and until then it is discreet that public opinion should be suspended. Certainly this action of Mr. Lincoln has produced great excitement in Washington and New York. It was unexpected from the fact, that he was taken from the head of the army when face to face with the enemy. To say the least, it must have been a special military necessity, that has induced President Lincoln to take this bold step, and whether the sequel will prove good or bad, the responsibility rests on him for the removal of General McClellan.

The Boston Courier says, "The Administration would seem to have reached the utmost height of indiscretion in the removal of General McClellan from his command. We are unable to imagine any point to which it could further go." The Morning Post says, "While General McClellan could beat his enemy in the front, he was not a match for the radical marplots in his rear. They traced President Lincoln for recalling him—to them Antietam had no glory. The New York Tribune helishly said, 'That it could see nothing to thank God for in this result; and from that hour to this, the radical set who wrung from an unwilling President the Proclamation, sought to wring from him the removal of General McClellan.' The Journal and Herald express no decided opinions. The Advertiser with its usual fairness, says, 'The country will learn with sorrow that the General who was called upon in our extremity, a few weeks ago, to save the Capital, and to whom the safety of these States from invasion is due, has now been relieved from his command. The Government will no doubt feel it necessary to make known without delay, the reasons which can have led it to take this step.'

The November elections out of New England have resulted in favor of the Democrats. A writer from Washington says, "The cowardly caution of Mr. Seward and the frantic blundering of Mr. Stanton, discouraged and disgusted thousands of voters." There is but little news of importance to-day. The rumors are probably truthful, that our army of the Potomac, under its new and gallant leader, General Burnside, is daily advancing towards the lines of the enemy, and a general battle will become inevitable."

QUINCY CHARITABLE SOCIETY. The Annual Meeting of the Society was held Monday evening, Nov. 3, when the following persons were elected officers for the ensuing year: President: Rev. J. D. Wells. Vice President: Deacon George Baxter. Secretary: Miss Mary Baxter. Treasurer: Miss Sophia Marsh. Directors: Messrs. Henry Barker, Benjamin F. Curtis, Mrs. Benjamin Curtis, Mrs. H. N. Glover, Mrs. Eliph Baxter, Mrs. Nathan Ames, Miss Ann Curtis, and Miss Susanna B. Marsh.

The Treasurer's Report was read and accepted. Number of families assisted the past year, twenty-one. Amount of receipts, $88 05. Disbursements, $110 19.

THE BATTLE FIELD OF BULL RUN.—The field of the last Bull Run battle presents a most sickening scene. The fields are strewn with dismantled gun carriages, caissons, clothing, shot, shell, and the dried mummy-like remains of slaughtered horses which appear on almost every hand. The limbs of the half-buried dead are seen protruding from the earth; arms and legs are frequently found upon the surface of the ground, with the muscles and portions of the flesh still adhering to the bones, and in some instances bearing the marks of dogs and buzzards.

NORFOLK MEDICAL SOCIETY. By special invitation of Dr. Woodward, of this town, the Norfolk District Medical Society, met at the Hancock House, on Wednesday last. Their next quarterly meeting will be at Dedham.

POSTAGE STAMPS. The first postage stamp was issued in London on the 10th of January, 1840, and for nine years England made use of it. France adopted it on the 1st of January, 1849; the Tour-and-Tax-Office introduced it into Germany in 1850; and it is now in use in sixty-nine countries in Europe, nine in Africa, five in Asia, thirty-six in America, and ten in Oceania. Van Diemen's Land possesses its own, and so do Hayti, Natal, Honolulu and Liberia.

REBEL RAM IN CHARLESTON HARBOR. The Rebels at Charleston have constructed a ram, evidently for harbor defence. She is apparently about the size of a tow-boat, with an iron beak; not very formidable.

The Independent Boston Fusileers.

This Company is undoubtedly the oldest Infantry organization now in existence in the Commonwealth or the New England States, having been organized during the year 1786. There are companies still in existence, formed first as Artillery, whose organizations date back prior to that of the Fusileers; but the latter company is the only one which has sustained their Infantry organization. The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, and the Cadets were separate organizations, and were never attached to any regiment.

The Fusileers was the first company to rally round the government and the law after the revolution; and have always occupied a position of proud eminence among the military of Boston. During the administration of President Jackson, in 1835, they made a visit to Washington—being the first Boston company that ever visited the Capital. They dined with "Old Hickory" at the White House, and were five weeks on the tour.

When it was announced that the First Regiment would be accepted for the war, the Fusileers held a meeting, at which seventy-two members were present, and the question was put to them, "How many are willing to serve under Capt. Snow for three years?" when every man answered, "Aye," showing that they were not holiday soldiers. The regiment was tendered to the Governor, but not accepted. Shortly after this, the First Regiment went into camp at Fresh Pond, and finally proceeded to the Seat of War.

THE NEW COMPANY.

The second company of Fusileers, now encamped at Readville, (Dedham,) and soon to leave for the war, are composed of the most energetic, hardy and enterprising men that any community can collect into a military organization. Many of them have had their ability tested in the drill room, and in long marches and travels from three hundred to one thousand miles or more. Each member is not only a soldier in his company, but is a good citizen, and enlists to protect his rights as a citizen, in the most effective manner.

The Captain and First Lieutenant, Alfred N. and Albert E. Proctor, are twin brothers, and were connected with the old company nineteen years, holding commissions seven years, and resigned in 1859. The Second Lieut., Thaddeus H. Newcomb, is a native of Quincy, and too well known to need an extended notice from us. He has held the office of lieutenant, and of captain, in the volunteer company of this place, with marked ability and honor; and we feel confident that he will win new laurels in his present position. May success attend him and all the Quincy boys connected with this company. The names of those from this town we give below:—

Obed F. Allen, Lucius Higgins, William M. Bird, William Logan, Gilbert F. Blaisdell, John Luzader, John C. Bishop, Francis L. Nott, George R. Derry, John F. Parrott, Daniel Dinagan, Benjamin R. Pierce, Richard Ellis, Henry O. Studley, Albert A. Hayden, William Stiles, John Harmon, Levi Vincent, Henry F. Horn, James Vance, Albert A. Holt, James W. Vinal.

Vote for Senator.

The candidates for Senator in the East Norfolk District were both from this town; and, thinking it might be interesting to our readers, we give the vote cast for each, in the several towns in the District. The Republican candidate, Francis M. Johnson, it will be seen, received a majority of 306 in the District; although, Jeffrey R. Brackett, the People's candidate, received a majority of 82 votes, in Quincy:

	Johnson	Brackett
Braintree,	315	261
Milton,	171	143
Quincy,	323	405
Randolph,	434	330
Stoughton,	344	242
Weymouth,	644	424
Total,	2331	1925

COTTON AND POTATOES. A fact is mentioned in the Courier du Bas-Rhin (France) which shows that the scarcity of cotton has had a great influence on the price of potatoes in the French manufacturing districts. In the department of the Moselle, potato flour was used for stiffening cotton. Since the manufacture of that article has diminished in consequence of the civil war in America, potato flour has ceased to be used for stiffening, and the price of potatoes has diminished so considerably in the markets of Lorraine that they are to be purchased now at three centimes a litre, (less than one cent.)

COTTON FROM INDIA. The Toronto, (C. W.) Globe states that twelve vessels laden with cotton, from India, reached Liverpool during one day, Sept. 25th. Their aggregate cargoes amounted to fifty-four thousand six hundred and fifty-seven bales. The largest being six thousand and fifty-six bales, and the smallest three thousand four hundred and ninety.

TAX STAMPS. There are no less than ninety five different stamps required to be used, from one cent to twenty dollars, and to purchase one of each would require $196.58.

The combination of ingredients in these Pills are the result of a long and extensive practice. They are mild in their operation, and certain in correcting all irregularities, Painful Menstruations, removing all obstructions whether from cold or otherwise, headache, pain in the side, palpitation of the heart, whirles, all nervous affections, hysteria, fatigue, pain in the back and limbs, &c., disturbed sleep, which arise from interruption of nature.

DR. CHEESEMAN'S PILLS was the commencement of a new era in the treatment of those irregularities and obstructions, which have consigned so many to a PERMANENT GRAVE. No female can enjoy good health unless she is regular, and whenever an obstruction takes place the general health begins to decline.

They are known to thousands, who have used them at different periods, throughout the country, having the sanction of some of the most eminent Physicians in America.

Poetry.

The Field of Beans.

BY W. S. MORTON.

In olden time, when the freed bondsmen made
Those golden laws, which classic Greece obeyed
Right but severe. Then strong in virtues' cause, Zalencus died to justify his laws.

But he, whose precept made Zalencus just,
Than to foul gods a vain devotion make;
Had yet within his strange beighted soul,
A baleful spirit he could not control.

And so Pythagoras lived:—his tenfold mind
Bow'd to a presence which he could not bind:
Sad superstition—full of wayward scenes—
He bent in reverence to a field of beans.

Better Iconoclast!—and idols break,
Than to foul gods a vain devotion make;
So reasoned not the Sophist of the East
But perished rather than destroy his "beast."

Hard pressed by foes, from Milo's mansion fled,
Through old Crotone's plains his way he sped,
And sees a refuge where protection lies—
But stops and there on Safety's threshold dies.

What means this pause?—why not pursue the path
Where bloody hands in their revengeful wrath
Could never reach him?—Strange! but this it means:
Much rather death than crush the field of beans.

A field of beans! The lips contemptuous curl,
At folly that would shame the simplest girl;
Man thinks that he would dare the battle's strife—
A thousand dangers—every thing for life.

But is it so? With us the way is clear,
To crush rebellion in its mad career;
And with one word our noble country save,
Thus sweeping off the traitor and the slave.

Why do we pause? Why silent is the voice,
Whose heavenly tone would bid the earth rejoice?
Seek out the cause—go thou behind the scenes
Bondage of man has been our "field of beans."

Our superstition! sacred now no more,
We crush our beans—our tyranny is o'er.
The sage's lot was death! "Thou'st to live,
And to the world undying freedom give."

A Woman's Song to Woman.

Pull the needle, swing the broom,
Tidy up the littered room;
Patch the trowsers, darn the shirt,
Fight the daily dirt and dirt;
All around you trust your skill,
Confident of kindness still.

Stir the gruel, knead the bread,
Tax your hands, and heart, and head!
Children sick, and household hungry,
(Though thoughtless words have stang you)
All are waiting on your will,
Confident of kindness still.

Never mind the glance oblique,
Never cause of coldness seek;
Never notice slight or frown;
By your conduct live them down;
All at last will seek your skill,
Confident of kindness still.

Sing the song, and tell the story,
Of the Saviour's coming glory.
To the children whom he blesses,
With your guidance and caresses,
Who for all things wait your will,
Confident of kindness still.

Feed the hungry and the weak,
Words of cheer and comfort speak,
Be the angel of the poor,
Teach them bravely to endure;
Show them this, the Father's will,
That they trust his kindness still.

Look for nothing in return,
Let not wrath within you burn;
Gratitude may be your lot,
Then be thankful; but if not,
Are you better than your Lord,
Who endured the Cross and sword,
From those very hands whose skill,
Waved over on his will?

Noble is a life of care,
If a holy zeal be there;
All your little deeds of love,
Heavenward help at last may prove,
If you seek your Father's will,
Trusting in his kindness still.

Anecdotes.

A sick man observed to his wife:
My dear, I am not well to-day. Will you prepare me a light dinner?

What will you have?
Apple dumplings.

They were accordingly made, when he sat down alone to a dish of eighteen.

After having despatched seventeen and a half, and showing strong symptoms of finishing the remaining morsel, a little urchin, a son of his, cried out:

O dad, give me that?
He very emphatically replied:
Go away, my son, poor dad is sick.

Lord Chancellor Northington suffered much from the gout, and once, after some painful wadding between the woolpack and the bar in the House of Lords, he was heard to mutter:

I had known that these legs were one day to carry a chancellor I'd have taken better care of them when I was a lad.

Two little boys sat listening eagerly while their grandmother was telling them the Bible story of Elijah going to heaven in a whirlwind, with a chariot of fire, when little Willie interrupted her with:

Oh, Sammy, wouldn't you have been afraid?
Sammy hesitated a moment, and then replied:

No, not if I had the Lord to drive.

You had better ask for manners than money, said a finely dressed gentleman to a beggar boy, who had asked for alms.

I asked for what I thought you had the most of, was the boy's reply.

THE SPECIFIC PILL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR

Spermatorrhea, or Seminal Weakness,
and General Irritability in either sex.

This Malady, the terrible consequences of which are too well known to require more than a bare allusion to them, is one of the most insidious, and therefore dangerous of all the long catalogue of human ills. It saps the very springs of life, rapidly undermines the constitution, and sinks the unhappy victim into imbecility and a permanent grave! From one to six boxes of the SPECIFIC PILL are sufficient to effect a permanent cure in the Most Aggravated Cases, whether Constitutional, or arising from Abuse or Excess.

MEDICAL TESTIMONY.

We believe it to be, in the treatment of (Spermatorrhea, as near a SPECIFIC as any medicine can be.—B. Keith, M. D. [Am. Journal of Medical Science.]

I have found them all that could be desired.—
Their effect has been Truly Wonderful! I used
them in a case of Spermatorrhea of long standing, which has been under treatment for years.
I think three boxes will complete the cure.—E.
P. DICKER, M. D.

This is not a Homoeopathic Remedy, nor is there any mercury or other deleterious ingredient combined with it.

The Inner Chamber.

Dare you enter this inner room,
Hushed and darkened and full of gloom?
Softly whisper and gently tread,
Here is the yet unburied dead!

See—shall I turn the pall aside?
Four years ago to day he died—
But never yet on this silent face
Change of decay has left his trace.

Heavy and black is this billowy hair,
Heavy and black—like my own despair;
O'er the white temples its dark waves roll,
Like woe and wrong on a fated soul.

Never again, as in days of old,
When every thread was denser than gold,
Thinking of bright and happy things,
Shall I twist its masses in shining rings.

Never again shall I meet these eyes
With a thrill of welcome and sweet surprise;
Or deep in their midnight darkness see
The love I thought was so true to me.

Never again shall these proud lips press
My forehead in mute caress,
Leaving a charm against sorrow and strife,
The beauty and crown of my woman's life.

I have sat since then, in darkness and dust,
Hating the world for my outraged trust;
My grief has been mad and wild, I know—
But God forgive me, I loved him so!

This room is my heart where your footsteps
Tread,
This corpse is my heart's uncoffined dead,
Which, till life's long day shall find its night,
Will never be buried out of sight.

I have watched and waited and prayed in vain,
For this form to arise and live again—
But where is the angel, as of yore,
To toll the stone from the sepulchre door?

How all of us would hate and despise the man who would misuse our gifts as we misuse
those of heaven.

Generally speaking, the beggars most ashamed of begging are those that have to beg pardon.

Why are railway companies like laundres-

Some people's hearts are shrunk in them

they walk.

A Western paper says: After this war is over cripples will be at a premium, and patriotic ladies will refuse to marry any man who has not lost either a leg or an arm.

It is highly ridiculous not to get rid of our own faults, which is in our power, and show abhorrence of, and be so eager to reform the faults of other people, which is not in our power.

Punch deals in philosophy as well as fun

If you'd keep your enemies from knowing any harm of you, don't let your friends know any.

The road ambition travels is too narrow for friendship, too crooked for love, too rugged
for honesty, and too dark for science.

Surely that man may be envied who can

a regret.

Getting an Indorser.

BY W. T. ADAMS.

My friend Frank Howard, was a dry goods dealer on Washington street. When I first made his acquaintance he was one of the most active and successful salesmen in the trade, and being a prudent man, had saved
a small sum of money, with which, and the credit he might be able to obtain, he proposed to commence business on his own account.

Among his acquaintances he had the good fortune to include a wealthy merchant, whose judgment had led him to form a lofty estimate of the business capacity of my friend.

To him the young aspirant for mercantile honors stated his case, and the conference ended in a voluntary proposition on the part of the merchant to supply the goods necessary to stock his store, taking his notes, the first of which would fall due in one year in payment.

The arrangement was completed, and in a few days Frank found himself installed in a convenient store, on the best part of the street, ready to strike for his fortune.

The notes had not been signed, and one evening, on some business connected with them, Frank called by appointment, at the princely mansion of his worldly benefactor.
He was ushered into the sitting-room where the merchant was reading the evening paper.

By his side sat a beautiful young lady, to whom his patron politely introduced him.

My friend belonged to that anomalous class of beings, styled "handsome men;" at least, the ladies said he was handsome, though for the life of me I never could tell wherein his beauty consisted. But as I have no particular fancy for masculine beauty, it may have escaped my notice, or the natural selfishness of mankind may have prejudiced my judgment.

My friend was acknowledged by all the ladies to be a remarkably handsome man, and probably this was the secret of his immense success as a salesman. Whether he reckoned his beauty as one of the items of his stock in trade, when he went into business,
I am unable to say; but I have not the least doubt he based his hopes of success, to a great extent, upon the influence of his pre-possessing personal appearance.

Frank fixed his eyes on the young lady, as the merchant, who had, when he turned,
half read a money article in his paper, turned to finish it. Miss Allen—such was the name by which she had been presented to him—was busily engaged in crotchet; a little silk purse; and as she bent over the work, Frank was perfectly satisfied that he had never seen so pretty a face in his life.

And then the neatest, most graceful little foot in the world protruded from beneath a light silk dress—a foot which completely turned Frank's head, so that he forgot all about the notes and the merchant.

Without the least regard to etiquette, politeness, good breeding, and all that sort of thing, he stared mercilessly at her, and never,
for even the fraction of a moment, removed his gaze, not even allowing himself the luxury of winking, lest the time so employed should be lost.

Frank was perfectly sure that he had never before felt exactly as he did at that halcyon moment. It seemed as though all the divinities of paradise were concentrated in the fair form before him, as though he had been transplanted to an Elysium of love.

And the maiden was not altogether unmoved. The embryo merchant several times detected her in the act of stealing a glance at him through the long, fringing eyelashes that adorned her peerless brow. He plainly saw her blush; saw her bosom heave with a flutter as she caught his gaze.

Frank Howard was a handsome man; and some how or other, men and women who are favored in this respect always contrive to find it out. Frank knew that he was a handsome man, and never in his life did he more devoutly thank his stars, which had given him personal beauty, than at this particular moment.

The young lady had already found out that he was handsome, and if the stupid fellow had not stared so furiously at her she would not doubt have done the same thing that he was doing.

Mr. Allen finished the money article, and laid down his paper. Frank has owned to me that he wished it had been twice, or even four times as long.

The details of the business were discussed,
and the papers drawn. While it was in progress, Frank more than once detected the beautiful fairy in the act of looking at him;
several times detected her in the very act of blushing when their eyes met.

The business was finished at last, much to the regret of my handsome friend, who, when he got into the street, went straightway into a fit of abstraction, and had walked half way across Charlestown bridge, on his way home, before he happened to think that he lived at the South End.

It was all up with poor Frank; he had fallen in love—was stark, staring mad in love—with whom he knew not—for it was well known that Mr. Allen had no daughter.
She was a relative, however, for she bore his name.

But if Frank was in love, there was some consolation in the fact that the fair creature who had stolen his heart was in the same predicament.

The next day she came a shopping at his store—and the next, and the next; indeed, almost every day. No conversation passed between them; and though he had been introduced on the evening of his visit, he had been too much overwhelmed to use words.

My friend, however, did not lack that necessary attribute of a successful wooer, somewhat vulgarly termed "spunk." He had no further business with the merchant; but then his case was a desperate one, and he made an errand.

Miss Allen blushed as he entered, but she was social and agreeable to the last degree—
so much so that Frank staid till the bells rung for nine o'clock before he knew it. The ice was broken, and my friend was in for it.

The lady was a niece of the merchant, twenty-one years of age, and an heiress. In the course of a few months Frank's energy won the victory, and it was understood that they were engaged.

The merchant did not like it. Being somewhat exclusive in his ideas of social intercourse—the prospective marriage of his wealthy niece to a poor retailer, was repugnant to the last degree, and he resolved to thwart the purpose of the loving couple.

At first he appealed to the young lady;
but she only laughed at him; told him bluntly that she loved Mr. Howard, and would have him. Then he reasoned with Frank on his ingratitude to him, his benefactor. The young man was touched, and promised to consider it.

He did consider it—and his loving inamor-ata helped him to consider it. After a hasty deliberation it was unanimously agreed to lay the whole matter on the table.

Mr. Allen was informed of the decision, and as old fogies always do, when they cannot do any thing else, but his lip and swallowed his words, fully resolved to do something dreadful whenever an opportunity occurred.

CHAPTER II.

A year after my friend went into business,
as I went to my store one morning, I was not a little surprised to find it closed. Before the window was that ominous white cloth,
denoting that the occupant had failed.

I entered the store. Frank stood at his desk glancing with a woe-begone aspect at the pages of his ledger.

How's this, Frank? I asked; and I never was more surprised in my life.

But up! don't you see? replied he rather petulantly.

But what does it mean?
Mean! Why, that I had a note of a thousand dollars due yesterday, which I could not pay, and this morning early my amiable friend,
Mr. Allen, put in a keeper—that's all.

How does it happen? I thought you were doing a rushing business.

So I was. I had the money to pay this note six weeks ago, and let Smith have it at two per cent. a month, replied he with a ghastly smile.

And Smith has failed?
Not exactly. He has stopped; but every one says he is good, if he has time to turn himself.

And you must make a fail of it in the mean time?

If I could only stave off Mr. Allen a couple of months I could get out of the scrape with flying colors.

Won't he wait.

Frank shook his head: he had mortally offended the proud merchant, and there was no prospect that he would be lenient in the slightest degree.

Can't you raise the money?
No; times haven't been so hard for four years. Every body is failing, and the money-men won't trust their own fathers.

At this moment Mr. Allen entered the store. He looked stern and severe, like one who has the power in his own hands, and is disposed to use it. I seated myself near the desk as he approached.

The merchant politely saluted the unfortunate dealer, smiling as blandly as though nothing had happened; as though he had no niece, and Frank were a stoic.

Mr. Howard, this is unfortunate; but in the midst of so much commercial disaster,
you perceive that it was my only course,
said the merchant, soothingly.

I suppose it was; but you know the cause of my inability to pay the note; returned Frank, with a doleful expression.

Ah, young man, you ought not to have lent
the money to Smith; if you had asked my advice I could have told you better.

Smith was always supposed to be good.
The merchant shook his head.

But, Mr. Allen, give me a short time, and I can pay the note. Smith assures me he shall recover himself.

Mr. Howard, I certainly wish you well; I have done all I could to give you a fair start.

So you have, sir, and I am very grateful to you.

Are you? and the merchant fixed a keen glance upon the young man.

I assure you that I am.

How have you manifested it? continued the merchant, sternly. But no matter; we meet now as business men.

Well; what shall be done? You have stopped me; I can do no more.

I don't wish to be hard. I would wait if prudence would justify it, said Mr. Allen, who was keenly sensitive in regard to his reputation for generosity and fairness.

In fact, he was a man of good feelings,
and only that he meant to punish Frank for falling in love with his wealthy niece, would not have disturbed him.

You will be just as secure two months
hence as now, pleaded Frank.

I have not that confidence in you, Mr.
Howard—I say it frankly—which I had once.
You have lost a thousand dollars. I doubt if your stock under the hammer would pay my notes.

Frank looked savage; for, though he was crestfallen, he was Frank Howard yet, and felt keenly the unjust imputation of the merchant.

I wish to be fair, and even indulgent, continued Mr. Allen, before Frank had time to utter the ungracious sentiment that rose to his lips. Here is the note; give me one good endorser, and I will wait two months.

Frank looked up and smiled with contempt
at the miserable subterfuge of the merchant who meant to crush him, and still preserve an appearance of fairness. He knew it would be impossible for the young man, with his stock encumbered, to procure the security.

Will you take Smith? asked Frank, hurriedly.

Of course not, replied Mr. Allen, with a bland smile.

I will see what can be done; but I think
the case is hopeless.

The merchant withdrew, assured in his own mind that his revenge was sure, and his reputation safe at the same time.

Frank and myself canvassed the matter,
but we could think of no person whose milk of human kindness was sufficiently abundant to prompt him to do such an insane act. While we were debating the matter, Frank was struck up by the entrance of Miss Allen.

How gloomy you look here to-day, Frank,
said she, laughing, and showing in the act
the prettiest row of pearly teeth I ever saw.

We are gloomy, indeed, replied Frank, muttering a sickly smile. But you know the reason.

Why, what reason? asked she, her merry expression relapsing into a serious one.

You see that man.
Yes.

He is a keeper! replied Frank, with tragic effect.

A keeper! of what? Are you insane? responded the lady, playfully; for it must be confessed she was not acquainted with the technicalities of business.

Frank laughed, and explained the disaster
which had overtaken him.

Poor! exclaimed she, with appearance of relief; and I really believe, if the keeper and myself had not been in the way, she would have thrown her arms around his neck
and kissed away his mortification.

I had before been introduced to the lady,
and at this moment advanced to join in the conversation.

And my uncle is the wretch! continued she, merrily. But what can you do? How can you get out of it?

Frank explained the proposition to procure an endorser for the note. The light-hearted maiden appeared to have but little sympathy for the misfortunes of her lover, and asked all sorts of questions about endorsers, notes,
and business forms.

Where is the note you are to have endorsed? asked she.

Mr. Allen has it.
How can you have it endorser, then?
I can write another, replied Frank, smiling
at the innocence of his betrothed.

Then write one, said she, promptly.

Frank looked at her a moment to ascertain what mischief was lurking in her mind. She smiled, apparently without the power to prevent it. The lover, impelled by curiosity as much as any other motive, wrote the note and signed it.

Now, how do you endorse it? asked she.

By writing your name across the back.

The lady approached the desk, and turning the note, wrote, with two dashes of the pen,
"Isabel Allen," across it.

It is endorsed, said she, with a smile,
which told Frank all she meant.

But Isabel—
Good morning Frank, interrupted she, and hastened out of the store.

Bravo, Frank! exclaimed I.
He smiled doubtfully. His pride was a little touched.

Would you use it? said he, after a long pause.

Use it? to be sure! and he did use it.

In the afternoon Mr. Allen called, satisfied in his own mind that he should witness the complete humiliation of the young man, who had the audacity to fall in love with an heiress. Knowing at what hour he would call, I was careful to be present.

Well, Mr. Howard, how have you succeeded? I have really been in hopes you would be able to secure the paper, and I could plainly discern the malicious chuckle on his face as he spoke.

I have succeeded, Mr. Allen; and am infinitely obliged to you for your good will.

The merchant was completely staggered at the reply. It was wholly unexpected, and wholly unbecoming also.

I trust you have procured a good one, said
he, painfully.

A wealthy one, but a name unknown on State street.

Can't take it, then, answered the merchant,
proudly and with renewed hope.

But a name well known to you! and Frank handed him the note.

Mr. Allen started back with surprise and anger, as he read the name of the fair en-dorsor.

Very well, sir; when a man of any delicacy can resort to such a trick as this I have nothing more to do with him. And the crestfallen merchant, after throwing the old note on the counter, hastened indignantly from the store.

The keeper was within, and Frank heard no more from Mr. Allen. A week after, Smith paid the money, and Frank took up his note.

Before another of the notes came to the frail things of earth. May the twilight hour prove a type of the calm and tranquil way in which we may close our day of life.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Nov. 22d, 1862.

"Born to no Master, of no Sect are we."

Installation.

Rev. Edward Payson Thwing, late pastor of the St. Lawrence street Church, Portland, (Me.), was installed, on Wednesday last, over the Evangelical Congregational Church in this town. The usual examination of the candidate in theology and Christian experience took place in the forenoon, before a large and respectable council. After expressing their satisfaction at the result, the members of the council proceeded to assign the several parts.

Invocation and reading of the Scriptures—Rev. Mr. Lane of East Weymouth.

Prayer of Installation—Dr. Storrs of Braintree.

Charge to the Pastor—Rev. Mr. Emory of Weymouth.

Right Hand of Fellowship—Rev. Mr. Brown of South Malden.

Address to the People—Rev. Mr. Means of Dorchester.

Concluding Prayer—Rev. Mr. Teale of Milton.

The venerable Dr. Storrs being obliged to leave town at noon, Rev. Mr. Rockwood officiated in his place.

The exercises in the afternoon were deeply interesting; and the audience good, considering the unpleasant weather. Rev. E. N. Kirk, D. D. preached from 1st Cor. 4: 16, a discourse full of instructive and consolatory truth. The Charge to the Pastor was timely and appropriate. The Right Hand of Fellowship was warmly given to Mr. Thwing by his immediate predecessor, who congratulated him on the cheering unanimity with which he had been called to this new field of labor, and expressed the hope that this place would long be his happy home. The Address to the People, we thought, was the best we ever listened to—entirely extemporaneous, yet faultless in diction and full of affectionate admonition—it could not have failed to produce the happiest impression. His remarks on promptness and liberality in meeting their pastor's dues, co-operation with him in word and deed, and a generous forgetfulness of "bye-gones," were exceedingly valuable. The following hymn, (composed by the father of the pastor, a City Missionary for twenty-six years past in Boston), was sung by the choir, whose performances on the occasion evinced good taste and thorough training:

When as sheep without a shepherd,
We were feeble and alone,
And exposed to many dangers,
Then we bowed before the throne;
Humbly seeking
Help which comes from God alone.

He who dwells amidst the churches
Deigned our suppliant voice to hear;
Incense rose from all our altars—
Now he comes to answer prayer.
We will praise him,
He has made this flock his care.

God has sent whom he appointed,
Him for whom we waited long—
Servant of the Lord's Anointed,
We will greet him with a song,
And together
Will the grateful notes prolong.

Messenger of God, most welcome!
Welcome Pastor, Teacher, Friend;
Come and guide us—guide our children—
To those joys that never end;
There a blissful
And eternal life to spend.

ACCIDENT. On Saturday last, in Weymouth, a young man, named Daniel A. Thayer, was assisting his father to unload several barrels of cider, when by some mishap one of the barrels fell upon the young man, breaking his leg below the knee. He was carried to his residence in Braintree, and Dr. Babbitt was called who set the broken limb.

FIRE. A large carriage manufactory in West Amesbury, (Mass.), owned by Isaac B. Little, and occupied by S. K. Bancroft & Co., was destroyed by fire, together with part of its contents on Friday evening of last week.

RAILWAY SURVEY. The Taunton Gazette states that a survey is now being made for a line of railway from Taunton through Dighton and Somerset to a point nearly opposite Fall River, with which it is proposed to connect by means of a ferry. It is said this route from Boston to Fall River, will be shorter by seven or eight miles than the present one.

TAX ON SALARIES OF CONGRESSMEN.—The tax on the salaries of members of the House of Representatives will be a handsome sum. Each member is taxed seventy-two dollars per year; the Speaker one hundred and forty-four dollars. The next House will consist of two hundred and four members, and the aggregate sum realized will be $14,520 a year. The amount derived from the employes of the House will be $7,433.

STAMP CURRENCY. It is understood that the Government will order a different and much better wearing paper for the postal currency, as that now in use is found to be unsuitable.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 20, 1862.

The city election takes place on the second Monday of next month, and as there are no indications of important opposition of a partisan character, Mayor Wightman, who now stands on his third heat, will probably be re-elected. He is not without his faults, but upon the whole, has discharged his duties with general satisfaction. There will be some changes in the Board of Aldermen and Common Councilmen—though not strictly by party lines; this is right, as the best men should be selected for city or town officers, irrespective of politics. The office of Mayor of Boston, has long since been a high post of patronage and responsibility, and it takes a pretty smart man to sustain its duties and dignities becomingly. Many branches of business are on a rush here, particularly with the industrial classes; and it would be all very well if the prices for the daily wants of life had not reached almost to a point with many articles of prohibition. Now wages, though advanced, are not sufficiently high to prevent this pressure upon the poor man who depends upon his daily labor to support himself and his family; as matters stand now, a dollar and a half goes no farther in expenditure than one dollar did twelve months ago; and there is no prospect that prices will grow less for some time to come. The financial history of the whole commercial world, shows that a vast expansion of paper currency, leads to a morbid advance of all kinds of property. What is the remedy for these evils to the industrial classes? the exercise of rigid economy. We should buy as little as possible and avoid the indulgence of all superfluities. Judging from appearances here in the city, these lessons are not much practised. Boston never appeared more gay than now. The streets are crowded with people dressed in the height of fashion. Gay social parties come off about every evening; the theatres are reaping a rich harvest—and money goes with many as free as water. The civil war seems to have lost many of its terrors, and were it not for newspaper intelligence, the people of New England would hardly realize that our very National existence is at a stake; that our armies are facing the enemy, and will soon encounter the mighty Southern hosts; with what results, the fortunes of war alone can determine; that our national expenditures are a million and quarter dollars daily—and that our brave soldiers, by hundreds of thousands, are suffering all the privations of camp duty at the seat of war.

The removal of General McClellan is bitterly commented upon by the public press. The strongest article we have seen in his favor is from the Boston Saturday News, of November 15th, instant. I give it to you as follows; as it contains some thunder, and a one-sided view of the case.

"GENERAL McCLELLAN'S REMOVAL."

"If the Abolitionists have had cause to sigh and groan over the returns of the fall elections, they have had a commensurate delight and joy in the removal of General McClellan. It is most amusing to see that their journals all declare he was not removed for political reasons, when a thousand party hawks and buzzards are pecking at the wounded eagle. The Abolitionists are feeding fat now on the ancient grudge. As cowardly as they are false and treacherous, they waited until the Government had put its strong hand upon General McClellan, and then came Tray, Blanche and Sweetheart, barking at his heels. Legions of looking gentlemen, with long faces, white cravats, and spectacles, who know as much of the science of war as a Hottentot knows of the mysteries of the Trinity, and dapper young gentlemen, whose military experience in arms has been gained by marching through the streets of Boston in beautiful military dress, and whose warlike ingenuity has only been exercised in managing to keep themselves clear of the draft, join together in discussing and depreciating the short-comings of General McClellan. The voice of the whole army was as nothing in comparison with the dictates of politicians, and he was sacrificed to their vengeance.

"The correspondence between Gen. Halleck and the War Department, shows that the whole machinery for the removal of General McClellan was arranged beforehand. The date explains this. The blow was purposely delayed until after the fall elections were over, and then the ball, which his enemies had been rolling up for a long time, was flung at his head. There may be a rebound to it.

"If nothing else could exalt McClellan, the modesty, the chaste brevity, and the patriotism which have pervaded his few addresses to the army and citizens since he was removed, would have done it. Some newspaper in his State has nominated him for the vacant New Jersey United States Senatorship. He must not leave the army for he will be wanted at a future day.

"We observe that two of the General's Staff have been arrested, and have gone on to Washington. It is not likely that any mortification will be spared to him which his enemies can inflict. Their day of triumph is a short one, but they are determined to make the most of it."

Evening. The latest news from the army informs us that General Burnside is concentrating his forces at Fredericksburg, on the Rappahannock—a direct route to Richmond. Important events must soon follow.

A LARGE SLAUGHTER. Within the last two months two thousand horses have been shot by order of the Government, the animals having become useless by severe usage.

ANOTHER WONDER IN TELEGRAPHING.

The reception of news over the wires direct from San Francisco to New York, a distance of three thousand five hundred miles, is an achievement not to be overlooked. It is believed to be the most remarkable "operation" yet recorded; and the imagination, even, is startled when called upon to believe that communications from city to city can thus pass through so vast a space almost instantaneously. Think of it: Information of a battle on the Atlantic read on the Pacific, before the sound of cannon has ceased to echo.

THE NEW SYSTEM OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Its Efficiency and Economy. There have been seven thousand collectors and deputy collectors, assessors and deputy assessors, appointed to collect the internal tax. The best judges estimated that $150,000,000 would be produced under the tax bill, but further investigation shows that it will exceed this amount by at least $50,000,000, besides the expenses of collection. It further appears that the expense of collecting this revenue will be less than the expense of collecting $100,000,000 customs. If these developments continue, a radical change may be made in the mode of raising money to carry on our Government. We have not yet begun to appreciate our wealth or our power.

THE NEWSPAPER TAX. Newspapers whose circulation does not exceed two thousand copies are exempted from taxation of receipts; and one thousand dollars of advertising receipts is exempt in all cases.

WEATHER AT THE SOUTH. There was a frost in New Orleans on the 15th of October, and the ladies were obliged to wear furs it was so cold.

PAPER AND SPECIE. The merchants of Portland, Maine, have agreed to receive silver coin in payment of goods at the following rates, (the prices of goods to remain unaffected), viz: A purchase of sixty cents' worth of goods will be paid for by a silver half dollar; thirty cents' worth by a silver quarter dollar; twelve cents' worth by a dime; six cents' worth by a half dime. They will pay out coin at the same rate.

ADVANCE IN NEWSPAPERS. The New Bedford Standard, New London Chronicle, Hartford Times, Press and Courier, and the Detroit Tribune have increased their rates of subscription on account of the great advance in paper and materials.

DIPHTHERIA. The Bridgewater Gazette says, there are a number of cases of this dreaded disease in that town.

INMATES AT THE ARMY HOSPITALS.—There are over one hundred thousand sick and wounded soldiers in the several hospitals in the country. In New York and neighborhood the number is twenty thousand.

MR. SEWARD AND MR. BUCHANAN. In connection with the recent statements as to Mr. Seward's relations with President Buchanan's Administration the following has some significance. We give it upon unquestioned authority:—Transcript.

"Just at the close of Mr. Buchanan's Administration, Hon. Charles Francis Adams said to one of his colleagues: 'I am going to tell you a secret. Governor Seward has been a secret of the United States for the last six weeks.'"

HOSPITALS. It is stated that four additional buildings are erecting at Frederick, Maryland, as hospitals, to which the wounded in the vicinity of the battle field of Antietam will soon be removed. The sick and wounded to the number of one thousand, near Sharpsburgh, now occupy tents.

THE GOVERNMENT has advertised for two thousand head-boards for graves. They are to be of black walnut, clear of knots, four feet long and ten inches wide.

FEMALE SPIES. General Sigel's scouts captured four women, dressed in United States uniform, seven miles out from Manassas, and turned them over to the proper authorities.

SUCCESS IS A DUTY. The New York Post says, it is reported that Mr. Lincoln said last week to a friend that, "in future, success should be the test of merit in our Generals, and that a failure should be at once followed by removal."

A Chowder will be served up at the Hancock Saloon this evening.

PAPER RAGS.

When pedlers paid a cent and a half a pound, and that too in tin ware, for paper rags, there was little inducement for the housekeeper to save her scraps of cloth. But the times have changed, and rags are now worth at least five times as much in cash. Every prudent housekeeper should now save her rags, and even old newspapers which have heretofore been used for kindling. The latter will readily sell for four cents and a half a pound.

COTTON DUCK.

At the present price of Cotton Duck, a suit of rails for a ship of 1,000 tons would cost not less than five thousand five hundred dollars, not including bolt-rope manufacture, &c., reckoning seven thousand five hundred yards for the suit, at an average price of seventy-five cents per yard. For a ship of 1,000 tons, No. 3 duck is used, which weighs one pound to the yard, a fact that will give some adequate idea of the amount of cotton used, as well as the weight of a suit of sails.

TRADE IN NEW ORLEANS.

A New Orleans paper says of the tobacco crop that it will be much less than usual this year; and of trade generally it says:

"The reverse in trade and the disruption of intercourse with the interior will have a telling effect on the general expenditures of society for months to come; yea, until we have peace, and that appears to be more remote than ever. In the meantime, what little trade we had to talk of is dwindling daily to the mere sales of some few dry and wagon loads of breadstuffs and provisions. Not a hoghead of sugar, a dry load of molasses, a wagon load of salt, nor a bill of lading for groceries do we observe going into the vacant stores on the streets. All, all are as silent as though the death-knell was sounding over this metropolis."

It is said that in shelling beans, if scalding water is poured upon the pods the beans will slip very easily from the pod. So also, it is said that by pouring scalding water on apples the skins may be easily slipped off and much labor saved.

There are no less than 384 vessels built and being built for our navy. Their total tonnage is 371,665 tons; guns 434. Of these there are 13 iron-raced gunboats built, and 40 new river and sea gunboats of different sizes in different stages of progress.

A man in Laporte county, Indiana, belonged to an association in Laporte, which was formed for the relief of those of its members who might be drafted. One thousand and forty dollars were paid in, which were to be divided pro rata among those of its members who might be drafted, and he was the only man drawn, and hence he will get the whole amount.

After completing his education, Mr. Bass entered a store in Boston and early commenced business for himself. About 1840, he moved to Newburyport, where he married and has resided until his death. Mr. Bass was a man of high character, of strict integrity, and a good citizen. In the relations of life he was all that could be desired—a good husband, a kind father, and a consistent Christian. His memory will be cherished by his early associates, and by those who were near and dear to him. He leaves a widow and four children.

[The following verses were found in the Bar-nicks formerly occupied by the 44th Mass. Regiment at Readville, (Dedham,) and have been handed to us with a wish that they might be published.]

Here in the upper bunk does sleep,
A carpenter and tailor;
Who hope with earnestness, that Jeff.
Will shortly be a fainer.
The carpenter will chisel none,
The tailor he would fit you,
And passers by, smart as you are,
Why either might not whip you.

And Andrew Hersey would you know,
He is the tailor, heeding
All men who for the Union go,
And are of gentle breeding.
And Newcomb is the carpenter,
Of fees would be a flogger,
And he would bore through Beauregard,
With his old Quincy auger.

Here in the lower bunk does rest,
The one-sixth of a dozen,
The first is Jacob Hersey, who Is Andrew Hersey's cousin;
For milliners he was a clerk,
But left the hats and bonnets
To march on for the Union cause,
And sing the Union sonnets.

Then Warren Adams snate along,
He is a cheerful covey;
And once he was a dry goods clerk,
And tended store for Hovey.
All glorious may our Warren be,
All hail the two undaunted;
And passers by, who are you are,
Know that more men are wanted.

The explanation of the cap of liberty is this:—After the death of Caesar, the conspirators, who had secured his death, marched out with a cap, as an ensign of liberty, carried before them on a spear—the cap without a head indicating that the tyrant had lost his power. From that fact, and for this reason, it has ever since been an emblem of liberty.

Miscellaneous.

The Maiden and the Emperor.

There was once a poor man who dwelt in a hut, and gained a livelihood by begging alms. He had an only daughter, whom Heaven had gifted with extraordinary wisdom; and who, little by little, taught her father to speak so wisely, that one day, when he had gone to ask alms of the emperor, the latter was astonished at the wisdom with which he spoke, and demanded from whom he acquired it.

From my daughter, O noble emperor! answered the poor man; and the emperor, being very wise himself, and proud of his wisdom, resolved to put that of the poor man's daughter to trial; so he gave the old man's three eggs, and said:

Take these to thy daughter, and bid her get them hatched into thirty pullets. If she refuses to obey, evil will befall her.

The poor man burst into tears, for he saw that the eggs had all been boiled. But when he had reached home, and had told his daughter all that had passed, she bade him be cheerful and retire to rest, telling him he need not fear any danger. She then took a pot of water, put a handful of beans into it,
and placed it over the fire; and on the morrow, when her father had risen, she gave him the boiled beans, and told him to dig a trench in a certain field, by which the emperor would pass as he went out hunting,

adding: And as the emperor passes by, take the beans and sow them in the trench and cry aloud: God be gracious, and grant that
my boiled beans may spring up quickly!
and if the emperor asks how it is possible for boiled beans to grow, reply that it is as easy as it is for a pullet to be hatched from a boiled egg.

The poor man did as his daughter had instructed him. He took his spade and dug a trench in a field, by the side of the highway, and when he saw the emperor coming,
he began to sow his beans in the trench, and
cry aloud, God be gracious, and grant that
my boiled beans may spring up quickly!

When the emperor heard these words, he stopped, and asked how it was possible for boiled beans to grow? Whereupon the poor man answered:

Gracious emperor, it is as easy as for a pullet to be hatched from a boiled egg.

The emperor divined who it was that had arranged this stratagem, and in order still more to try the maiden's wisdom he gave the poor man a pack of hemp, and said:

Take this to thy daughter, and bid her make me from it as many sails and ropes as are necessary for a ship. If she refuses to obey, her head shall pay the forfeit.

The poor man was sorely troubled at these words; and, having received the pack of hemp, returned to his daughter, weeping all the way.

But when he had told her all that had passed, she again comforted him, and bade him be cheerful and retire to rest, and fear no danger; and on the morrow, when he had risen she gave him a little piece of wood,
and said:

Take this to the emperor; and say that if he will cut me out a spinning-wheel, a loom and a shuttle, then will I do that which he has commanded.

The poor man did the second time as his daughter had instructed him; and when he had delivered her message, the emperor was more than ever astonished at her wisdom.

To put it to a new trial, he took a drinking glass, and said to the poor man:

Take this to thy daughter, and bid her
empty the sea with it, and make it bed dry enough to grow corn on. If she refuses to obey, both her head and thine own shall pay the forfeit.

At this the poor man was more terrified than ever. But when he had returned home and told his daughter what the emperor had commanded, the maiden comforted him the third time, and bade him be cheerful, retire to rest, and fear no danger. And on the morrow, when he had risen, she gave him a pound of tow, and said to him:

Take this to the emperor, and say that if he will stop with it the mouths and the springs of all the rivers in the world, then will I do that which he has commanded.

Again the man did according to his daughter's counsel; and when he had delivered her message, the emperor acknowledged that she was wiser than he himself, and commanded that she should at once be brought before him. When she had come into his presence, and had saluted him, he said to her:

My daughter, tell me what can be heard
the farthest?

And she answered, gracious emperor,
thunder and a lie.

The emperor then took his beard in his hand, and demanded of his councillors how much it was worth. When they had placed upon it a value—some greater and some less—the maiden said:

Most gracious emperor, none of thy councillors have answered well. The beard of the emperor is worth three showers of rain
in a dry summer.

These words delighted the emperor, who declared that the maiden had answered better than all his councillors. He then asked her if she would become his wife, saying that he would receive only one answer. The maiden prostrated herself before him and replied:

Gracious emperor, it is thine to command,
and mine to obey what thou commandest.
Let me ask of thee but one thing, namely,
that thou shalt give me a writing, written with thine own hand, that if it should ever be thy pleasure to send me away, I may carry from thy castle whatever single thing I may love best.

The emperor gave her the writing that she asked, and then had her placed upon the throne beside him.

For many summers the empress was loved by her husband; but it came to pass in time that she ceased to cherish her. He then said to her one day—I do not wish thee any longer to be my wife. Leave my castle and go wherever thou wilt.

She answered—illustrious emperor, I will obey thee. Grant me only that I may stay until to-morrow. The emperor granted what she asked, and in the evening she poured some of the juice of a certain herb into a cup of wine, and presented it to him, and said:

Drink, illustrious emperor, and be happy!
To-morrow I go away, and to-morrow I shall be more joyful than I was even on my marriage morn.

The emperor drank, and soon his eyelids became heavy, and he fell asleep; and while he slept, the empress had him lifted into a carriage which was in readiness, and therein conveyed to a distant grotto, which she long ago had prepared in anticipation of such an emergency. When the emperor awoke and found himself in the grotto, he angrily demanded how he had come thither.

I have had you brought here, replied the empress.

And he then asked, very angrily, wherefore she had done this, adding: Did I not say thou shouldst no longer be my wife?

The empress took out of her bosom the writing, which the emperor had given her before her marriage, and answered:

It is true, illustrious emperor; but this writing, which was given by thine own hand, accorded me the right to bring away with me, when I quitted the castle, whatsoever I might love best; I exercised my right, and brought thee, most gracious emperor.

When the emperor heard these words, he vowed never to part from so faithful and wise
a wife. So he embraced her, and returned with her to the castle; and they two sat thereafter side by side upon the throne, for many summers; and when the last summer
had passed, death reaped them both together,
like a double ear of corn.

Singular Coincidences.

A series of singular coincidences in connection with the demise of no less than three Presidents of the United States excited extraordinary interest at the time of their occurrence, and are still referred to as among the most remarkable of their class. On the 4th of July, 1826, being the fiftieth anniversary of the birth-day of the nation, died
John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, the immediate successors of Washington in the Executive office. They were both originally lawyers, both members of the Congress which declared the National Independence,
both on the Committee by which the Declaration itself was reported. One was actually the author of that memorable instrument, and the other one of its strongest advisers and supporters, while both signed it; both were subsequently employed on foreign missions,
both became Vice-Presidents, and both, finally, Presidents; and both, having assisted so materially at the nation's birth, and watched and fostered its growth for exactly half a century, sank at almost the same moment
into their final rest, and their memories received jointly the funeral honors bestowed upon them by their mourning country. It is doubtful if a parallel can be found any where in the pages of history. But to add to this extraordinary record, the death of James Monroe, the fifth President, occurred just five years later, in the year 1831, and also on the 4th of July. Although he had not been personally connected with the history of the Declaration of Independence, yet he had afterwards been one of its firmest defenders, and owed his eminence to its existence and perpetuation. Singularly enough, also, John Quincy Adams, sixth President, and Mon-roe's immediate successor, died on the 22d of February—another anniversary little less sacred to Americans than that of the 4th of July, viz: that of the birthday of Washington.

A Robber's Mistake.

Many years ago, before railroads were invented, Dr. Winship, of Boston, one day made a journey to Dedham in his own barouche.
It was on a beautiful summer evening, while on his return, that he got out of the carriage to walk up a long hill, telling his wife and daughter that he would overtake them at a tavern about a mile distant. The doctor did not go directly up the hill, but wandered off into a neighboring coppice to enjoy the delightful scenery at sunset. Just as he was about going into the road again he was met by a solitary Irishman, who accosted him, and flourishing a large stick, demanded his money. The doctor was frightened, and not thinking of resistance to such a powerful-looking antagonist, gave the fellow a handful of silver coins. But Pat was not so easily satisfied. He first made the doctor give up his pocket-book, which contained some eighty dollars, then his watch, and finally he even took away his gold spectacles. The disconcerted divine was then allowed to depart, and he started on a run for the top of the hill, whither his carriage had passed nearly half an hour before. The Irishman, either fearing an alarm, or on a lucky second thought, halted him.

Stop, you tafe of the world—stop! I say—I've not yet done wid ye—is it likely I'd let you off wid a better coat on yer back nor I've got myself? Strip off the broadcloth at once, or I'll be the death of ye!

The doctor had no alternative. The man was surely in earnest, and off went his coat, which the highwayman eagerly transferred to his own back. Now it so happened that Mrs. Winship was a little worried about leaving her husband behind. So, on arriving at the tavern, she told her driver to go back until he met the doctor, and accompany him forward. The man hove in sight at the top of the hill just at the moment that Pat had transferred Dr. W's coat to his own back.
Seeing some one coming, the Irishman took to his heels, and was soon lost to view in the neighboring woods. The driver, on coming to the relief of his unhappy master, at once proposed to lend him his own coat to wear up to the tavern, which was accepted.
Then thinking that the Irishman's ragged coat might perhaps lead to his detection, he took it up and carried it along. On arriving at the tavern the coat was examined, and in one of the pockets were found the doctor's stolen money, spectacles and watch! Pat had over-reached himself. But he was never detected.

Boldness.

There is in human nature generally more of the fool than of the wise; and therefore those faculties by which the foolish part of men's mind is taken, are most potent. Wonderful like is the case of boldness in civil business: What first? boldness: What second and third? boldness. And yet, boldness is but a child of ignorance and baseness, far inferior to other parts; but nevertheless,
it doth fascinate and bind hand and foot those that are either shallow in judgment or weak
in courage—which are the greatest part;
yes, and prevail with wise men at weak times; therefore we see it hath done wonders in the popular states; but with senates and princes less; and more, ever upon the first entrance of bold persons into action than soon after; for boldness is an ill keeper of promise. Surely, as there are mount-banks for the natural body, so there are mountbanks for the political body; men that undertake great cares, and perhaps have been lucky in two or three experiments, but want the grounds of science, and therefore cannot hold out; nay, you shall see a bold fellow many times do Mahomet's miracle.
Mahomet made the people believe he would call a hill to him, and from the top of it offer up his prayers for the observers of the law.
The people assembled. Mahomet called the hill to come to him, again and again; and when the hill stood still, he was never a whit abashed, but said: "If the hill will not come to Mahomet, Mahomet will go to the hill." So these men, when they have promised great matters and failed most shamefully, yet (if they have perfection of boldness), they will but slight it over, and make a turn and no more ado.—Bacon's Essay.

A Hint for Somebody.

A good story is told of a rustic youth and a country girl, who sat facing each other at a husking party. The youth, smitten with the charms of the beautiful maiden, only ventured a sly look, and now and then touched Patty's foot under the table. The girl determined to make the youth express what he appeared so warmly to feel, bore with these advances a little while in silence, when she cried out: "Look here, if you love me, why don't you say so; but don't dirty my stockings."

Description of Pekin.

An opportunity was afforded me of seeing Pekin early in the present month, a little before the relaxation of the restrictions on passports. I send you this brief account of some of the things I saw. The streets and gates are singularly regular. The Tartar city is square. There are two gates in each wall, placed opposite to each other; but the south wall has three gates instead of two, the middle one being in front of the Imperial palace.
Conceive of walls from forty to sixty feet high,
and thirty-five feet wide, crowned with lofty towers, of several stories, over the nine gates and at the corners. Had not the Chinese Government yielded, our troops would have found no little difficulty in forcing an entrance through such bulwarks. So said a colonel of one of our regiments to me lately, and with reason.

The Tartar city is three miles and a half across. In its center is the Imperial city, which, within a triple wall, incloses the palace. The approaches to the top of the wall consist of gradually rising slopes, suitable for cavalry to mount and close to the gates.
Some of them are open, and invite the visitor to ascend them. From the wall in the vicinity of the south central gate, there is a fine view of the palace. A succession of yellow-tiled roofs are seen stretching far to the north.
Beyond them is "Prospect Hill," or "Hill of Beauty," an artificial mound made to beautify the palace.

Let the reader suppose himself to be walking from this spot to the handsome terre plein to the eastward; he will observe the English and French flags waving, on his left, over gay, green-tiled roofs, which once protected princes of the Imperial family. He will also notice the Russian church very near them, and nearer yet to the wall he may observe a street where a crowd of Coreans are congregated. Their clothes are of white cotton, manufactured by themselves. A handkerchief is tied around their unshaven heads.
They wear laced shoes. In all these points differing from the Chinese, they exhibit also a bustling, disputatious, quarrelsome disposition, which scandalizes those who watch them.
But this may wear off on better acquaintance.
They drive bargains with genseng, the root whose tonic virtues are so celebrated in China, in stout paper, and strong calico, all of them products of their own peninsula.

After turning the angle of the wall, the Astronomical Observatory comes into view.
It is an open terrace adjoining the wall, and equally high. On this terrace are displayed the beautifully-cast observing instruments of Verbiest. They are of bronze, and appear to have been executed with great accuracy.
The large celestial globe is six feet in diameter. After a century and a half of exposure to skyey influences, they look fresh and capable of being used to advantage. Below this "terrace for observing the stars," there are seen lying on a slight elevation at the bottom
the astronomical instruments made in the Mongolian dynasty, nearly six hundred years ago, by the Chinese mathematician Kwo-sheu-king.

Near the Observatory is the Examination Hall, where thousands of students gather to acquire distinction in a struggle for literary honors. I met several candidates who had just arrived by steamer from Canton. Lower degrees are granted in the provinces; but that of Doctor in literature is only given in the capital. They were Masters of Arts who had braved the inconveniences of a sea voyage, rather than be checked by the disordered state of the intermediate provinces in their purpose of reaching Pekin. Only 200 out of 5,000, they told me, can receive the coveted honor. Their own chance was not a bad one,
because, coming from remote provinces,
twelve or fifteen hundred miles distant, they would share in the advantage gained by the equitable distribution which the Emperor makes of the 200 diplomas among the provinces to which candidates belong.—English

Husband and Wife.

Addison has left on record the following
important sentence:

"Two persons who have chosen each other out of all the species, with design to be each other's mutual comfort and entertainment, have, in that very action, bound themselves to be good humored, affable, joyful, forgiving and patient, with respect to each other's frailties and imperfections, to the end of their lives."

Color of the Eyes.

That the color of the eyes should affect their strength may seem strange, yet that such is the case needs not at this time of day to be proved; and those whose eyes are brown or dark-colored should be informed that they are weaker and more susceptible of injury,
from various causes than gray or blue eyes.
Light blue eyes are generally the most powerful; the next to those are gray. The lighter the pupil, the greater the tension the eye can sustain.

Orpheus C. Kerr's Last.

From the last letter of Orpheus C. Kerr,
we extract the following passage:

"It is the 'Union as it was,' that we want,
my boy, and those who have other articles to sell are hereby accused of being accused Abolitionists. I was talking the other day to a venerable Congressman from Maryland, who had just arrived to protest against the disturbance of mail facilities between Baltimore and the Capital of the Southern Confederacy, and says he, I have several friends who are Confederates, and they inform me they are perfectly willing to return to the Union as it was, in case they should fail in their present enterprise.

If I thought, says the Congressman, hastily placing a lottery ticket in his vest pocket, if I thought this war was to be waged for the purpose of injuring the Southern Confederacy, rather than to restore the 'Union as it was,'
I should at once demand more mileage of the Government and repeatedly inquire what had become of all the 'Wide-Awakes.'

As he uttered the last horrible threat, my boy, I was impressed with a sense of darkly Democratic. Too many of the Wide-Awakes of the last campaign are indeed fast asleep
now,

severance of his monomania, and supposing it only a whim, the governor commanded them to comply with his request. The cane was accordingly handed through the grating; upon which the prisoner, uncrowding the grate, took out a roll of bank notes, paid the debt, with interest, and walked coolly off, his cane in his hand.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Nov. 29th, 1862.

"Born to no Master, of no Sect are we."

A Large Sale of Property.

We learn that our highly esteemed townsman, R. B. Leuchars, Esq., the president and projector of the Quincy Horse Railroad, has disposed of his beautiful estate, some two hundred acres of excellent land, adjoining that of the Quinys, in the north part of this town—and also his interest in the Quincy Railroad—to George Eaton, Esq., of Boston; who we believe will take the place of Mr. Leuchars at the head of that Corporation.

We regret exceedingly that by a continuation of ill-health, this step has been rendered necessary by our friend, whom we look upon as one of the greatest public benefactors the town has been blessed with for years. Mr. Leuchars has done much to beautify and improve that section of Quincy near his residence; and, to his enterprise and energy, the citizens of this place are indebted for the cheap, commodious and hourly means of access to the city of Boston, which is afforded by the Horse Railroad.

In building this road, there were difficulties almost insurmountable, and but for the will, perseverance and untiring labors of our indefatigable president, we sincerely believe it would never have been completed. Now, after having placed it in a perfect running and paying condition, to the utmost surprise we might say of everybody, he is obliged to withdraw entirely, for the present, from active business, and seek in a foreign clime the recovery of that choice blessing—health. We sincerely hope that he will receive all the benefit he anticipates from his European tour, and return, reinvigorated in health and spirits, ready to engage once more in some improvement, equally pleasant and beneficial to our town honored place.

The Milton Murder.

Our community was shocked on Saturday evening last, from learning that murder "most foul" was committed on Friday night, November 21st, at Milton and Dorchester village, but three miles and a half distant from Quincy. We give the particulars from the Boston Herald of Sunday morning:

"The brutal murder committed in the quiet village of Dorchester Lower Mills, on Friday night last, continues to create much excitement among the people in that locality, but as yet no trace of the murderer has been found. Yesterday forenoon Coroner Vose summoned a jury to investigate the circumstances attending the horrible tragedy. The witnesses examined were Mr. George Hall, the employer of the murdered man, James Packard, and Doctors Holmes, Spooner and Ware. From the testimony of the witnesses the following particulars were elicited:

"Mr. Hall and a small boy were in the shop with Hocking, in the evening, and left him there a few minutes after nine o'clock. The deceased was then fitting a drawer into his work-bench, which stood within a few feet of the door. Mr. Hall, as he left, noticed how far Mr. Hocking had then proceeded in the work, and points out some that was done after he left, indicating that the deceased was not disturbed immediately by the approach of the murderer. At ten o'clock he was found leaning against some stairs leading to the upper story of the shop, and on being removed and laid upon his work-bench, he raised himself and was understood to say, 'Thank you,' but could give no audible answer to the question as to who had assaulted him. He was shortly after removed to his residence and physicians were called. During the night he remained in an insensible condition, moaning continually and appearing as if he was warring off blows aimed at his person. He had a wife and his mother also lived with him; the former being in a feeble state of health,—the shock of this sudden calamity will, it is feared, have an adverse result upon her condition. He died at half past seven o'clock on Saturday morning.

"From the appearance of the shop where the tragedy was enacted, the murdered man must have been at work with his head nearly down to the floor, when approached and struck by the murderer. There was but very little blood in the shop, and probably the greater part of the struggle was out of doors. The clothes of the deceased were considerably torn, and he was in a very muddy condition—proofs of a terrible struggle for his life. The mallet with which the blows were inflicted, was found outside the shop and has been identified as one belonging to Hocking.

"The post mortem examination of the body revealed eight wounds on the back part of the head, the skull fractured in several places, the left shoulder badly bruised, and the neck much swollen. The cause of death was concussion of the brain.

"It is thought by some that the murderer mistook his poor victim, (whose pocket-book containing a small sum of money is missing) for Mr. Hall, who sometimes carries a large sum of money about his person. As Mr. Hocking is not known to have had an enemy, the horrible deed was probably committed in the hope of obtaining a large sum of money.

"No arrests have been made up to the present time; the Selectmen have offered a reward of five hundred dollars for the discovery and apprehension of the murderer."

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, November 26, 1862.

The gloomy weather of the past week, has crippled transactions in all departments of trade. But the hope that the army of the Potomac, will go into winter quarters not short of Richmond, gives increased confidence that the rebellion is on its last foothold.

The telegraph news since Monday is of unusual interest. From the army we learn that the Fredericksburg route is not the only point from which the rebel capital will be attacked. There is evidence, also, that Richmond will be assailed by our forces from the South. The rebel Atlantic States are in a feverish excitement in consequence of the repeated capture of many of their towns by our fleets; the Legislature of Georgia is so frightened as to call out, volens or volens, all the militia of the State for its defence. Our gunboats are waking up the people of Savannah with unwelcome music. The war seems to be going on to its bitter end. We learn that Jeff. Davis is about to hang ten Federal officers as a reprisal for the hanging of ten guerillas by General McNeil, of Missouri; this is bad business. The rebel government is censured by its people for not defending North Carolina, and there is by no means a perfect harmony among the Southrons about the means used to prosecute the war. They have little hope of recognition by European powers, notwithstanding the French government proposes to interfere in the affairs of this country; but England will not consent to join her—and Russia will maintain a strict neutrality. The manufacturing districts of England are in great distress.

Congress meets a week from Monday, and its proceedings will be regarded with deep interest. The Annual Message of the President we are told beforehand, will be very long, making no modification of his Emancipation Proclamation. His intimate friends say he will adhere to its principles and abide the consequences. We have doubts whether freeing all the negroes in the rebel States on the first of January will make the war shorter, or more vigorous, or speedily restore the South to the Union. But our duty is plain to stand by the Government in all its efforts to crush the rebellion.

You perceive that a rise in the prices of daily newspapers in Boston commences December 1st, next. The Journal, Traveller, &c., to be three cents, and the Boston Herald, two cents per single copy. This is in consequence of the great advance of nearly every article in use upon newspapers—including the one-third advance in white paper, the heavy Government tax, and the increased price of labor.

Preparations for Thanksgiving are progressing very briskly to-day, notwithstanding the inclement state of the weather—and this annual festival bids fair to pass off very pleasantly; every day should be one of gratitude and praise to Heaven.

A CAUTION TO CLERGYMEN. A correspondent, says a contemporary print, desires us to caution clergymen in Massachusetts against a violation of the law on marriage: "A minister absent from his own place of residence renders himself liable to prosecution and fine if he solemnize a marriage, unless it be in the city or town in which one or both of the persons to be married reside. And he may thus subject the issue of such marriage to expensive litigation to obtain or retain property rightfully descending to them."

AN ADROIT FRAUD ON THE GOVERNMENT. Several enterprising fellows in Connecticut have gone into the collection and restoration of old postage stamps on a large scale. One of their modes of procedure is to visit unsuspecting clergymen in needy circumstances and state that as a matter of curiosity they desire to procure a million postage stamps, for which they will give two hundred dollars. The minister thinking it worth while to make an effort for the two hundred dollars in these hard times, opens his files of letters and carefully cuts off the stamps; sets the Sabbath school children at work in all the country around, and eventually earns his money. In one instance, the girls in a boarding school were set at work collecting stamps with the understanding that the money obtained for them should be devoted to a certain object of benevolence, and they were very industrious in hunting and begging old stamps all over the country among their acquaintances. How many millions of stamps the speculators obtained it is impossible to say, but it is now understood that they clean and sell the stamps, and thus defraud the Government. And it is a business that pays well; for a million three cent stamps are worth $30,000, and the collection and restoration of them does not probably cost one tenth that sum. This is a matter that some Government detective should investigate.

A GORMANDIZER. At Tiffin, Ohio, the other day, Van Anburg's trained elephant, "Hannibal," broke open the wagon of a candy pedler who followed the show, and gobbled down, in less time than it takes to read this paragraph, six thousand gingerbread cakes, seventy pounds of assorted candy, and forty pounds of "French kisses."

For the Patriot.

Death of a Young Patriot

As we journeyed through the West District of Quincy last week, on a beautiful autumnal morning, there was evidently sadness there. Several flags waved mournfully at half-mast, and sorrow was depicted on all the countenances we met. We soon learned that preparations were making for the funeral solemnities of Orderly Sergeant, Lemuel Colburn, of the 21st Massachusetts Volunteer Regiment, who died from wounds received at the recent battles in Maryland, after lingering many days at the Alexandria Hospital, in Virginia, aged twenty-nine years. He was, we believe, a native of Quincy, and much endeared by his friends and neighbors for his many virtues. Mr. Elijah A. Corlies, a kind friend and school-mate of the deceased, visited Washington and brought home the mortal remains of young Colburn to the dwelling house of his aged and widowed mother. On the afternoon of the funeral, the public schools were closed and all business was suspended in the West District; that all might participate in the funeral rites to a worthy young soldier. The obsequies were solemn and imposing, as the cortege pursued its way to his last resting place in Mount Wollaston Cemetery. Thus has fallen another noble son of Quincy while defending the glorious Banner of his country. Peace to his ashes.

SCARCITY OF PAPER. A meeting of the editors of New Jersey is to be held at Trenton, on Thursday, December 4, to consider the best course to be adopted in view of the rapid rise in the prices of paper and printing materials. This is the first of a concerted series of movements which will probably be rendered necessary in order to protect the newspaper interest against heavy loss.

WHISKEY AND NEWSPAPERS. A glass of whiskey is manufactured from perhaps a dozen grains of corn, the value of which is too small to be estimated. A pint of this mixture sells for one shilling; and if, of a good brand, is considered well worth the money. It is drunk in a minute or two—it fires the brain, sharpens the appetite, deranges and weakens the physical system. On the same sideboard upon which this delicious beverage is served lies a newspaper. It is covered with half a million of types—it brings intelligence from the four quarters of the globe. The newspaper costs less than the glass of grog—the juice of a few grains of corn; but it is no less strange than true that there is a large portion of the community who think corn juice cheap and the newspaper dear.

Godey's Lady's Book for 1863.

THE BEST LADIES' MAGAZINE IN THE WORLD.

To assist our readers in the selection of a good magazine, we copy the following card recently issued by the publisher.

The Literature is of that kind that can be read aloud in the family circle, and the clergy in immense numbers are subscribers.

The Music is all original, and would cost twenty-five cents, (the price of the Book) in the bookstores.

The Steel Engravings are unequalled. More are given, and infinitely better, than are published in any other work.

Double Steel Fashion-Plates: containing from five to seven full-length colored fashions on each plate. Far ahead of any fashions in Europe or America. Godey is the only work that gives these immense plates. The publication of these plates cost $10,000 or more. They may be relied on; dresses may be made after them, with safety and satisfaction.

Our Wood Engravings of which we give three times as many as any other magazine, are far superior to any others, being often taken for steel.

Drawing Lessons: No other magazine gives them, and we have given enough to fill several large volumes.

Our Receipts are such as can be found nowhere else. Cooking in all its variety; Confectionery; the nursery; the toilet; the Laundry; the kitchen; Receipts upon all subjects are to be found in the pages of the Lady's Book.

THANKSGIVING. The day was hallowed to our remembrance by the many kind offices of friends, in substantial testimonials of their esteem and friendship; to Mr. L. we were indebted for a fine turkey to grace our thanksgiving board—and to Mr. W. for a most welcome basket of delicious fruit. The generous donors have our best thanks; may their shadows never be less.

DEATH OF SERGEANT CHARLES W. CARVER. Intelligence was received here by telegraph, on Wednesday night, of the death of Sergeant Carver. He died in the Hospital, at Sharpsburg, Maryland, of wounds received in the late battles of Virginia. We are not in possession of the particulars; when we receive them we shall lay them before our readers.

THE DRAFT. The following is the number of nine months' men that appear to be still wanting in the towns of Norfolk County: Bellingham 9, Brookline 6, Canton 37, Cohasset 13, Dedham 4, Franklin 26, Medway 12, Quincy 16, Roxbury 36, Sharon 13, West Roxbury 16, Weymouth 3, Wrentham 32. Drafting will commence on the 8th of next month.

BROADWAY BANK. At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Broadway Bank, South Boston, held recently, the following gentlemen were chosen Directors: Seth Adams, William Eaton, Samuel Leeds, Joseph Smith, Henry Souther, Caleb Gill, Edwin Briggs, Jabez Frederick and Richard J. Monks—being the same board as last year. At a subsequent meeting of the Directors, Henry Souther was re-elected President.

THANKSGIVING DAY. Services appropriate to the day were held in the Orthodox Church. We will give our readers next week a sketch of the discourse preached by the pastor, Rev. E. P. Thwing.

Rev. Mr. Heath will examine Dr. Kirk's argument for Endless Misery, to-morrow afternoon, at the Universalist Church.

AN ENGLISH QUARTER OF GRAIN. In the English papers the prices of wheat, (or corn, as it is there called) is quoted by the quarter. A quarter is eight imperial bushels, which is equal to eight and a half American bushels. When, therefore, the papers quote wheat at fifty-seven shillings sterling per quarter, the price is in our currency and measure, in ordinary times, equal to about one dollar and seventy-five cents per bushel. With the present high price of gold, fifty-seven shillings a quarter would be equal to two dollars a bushel and upwards. This is at present about the price of good American wheat in London.

BOOTH AT THE BOSTON THEATRE. We would call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of the appearance of Mr. Edwin Booth at the Boston Theatre. Mr. Booth is now considered the best representative of his line of characters. See this day's paper for the week's performances.

EXEMPTS. Chelsea, supposed heretofore to have obtained all the exemptions possible, from draft, has had an addition made to the list of disabled. The Roxbury city government has adopted the measure of paying the fees for those unable to afford the expense of an examination.

THE ABINGTON STANDARD came to us last week, enlarged and otherwise improved in appearance. This was an agreeable surprise—for next to our own, we are always pleased to recognize the thrift and prosperity of our neighbor's. The publisher, Mr. C. C. Easterbrook, says, he has been prompted to this course, by the renewed disposition manifested, to share with him the expense of this new outlay, and sustain him in publishing a first class family paper. We wish the worthy proprietor every success, and the STANDARD a brilliant career.

THE NEW STORE. Ladies best quality French calf, double-soled Balmorals, for sale at Cummings' new Shoe Store, for $2.25. We invite all to call and examine before purchasing.

CURIOUS MISHAP. In the last British mail received at the Lowell Post Office, there was an English newspaper in which was found hidden a letter. The letter was mailed at Liverpool for Bradford, in Yorkshire, and after reaching the latter place, during the process of delivery it chanced to slip inside the wrapper of a newspaper which had been deposited at Bradford for Lowell, United States, and hidden there came safely to this city, whence it was started back again for the dominions of John Bull, with a full history of its travels written on its face. Such a peculiar accident would not happen to one letter in many millions.—Lowell Courier.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.
On to Richmond.

BY F. M. ADLINGTON—WEYMOUTH.

TUNE—Yankee Doodle.

At last, the Yankee's wide awake,
And bound to Richmond sartin;
He'll go it know and no mistake,
He'll set their hides a smartin'.

Go ahead and put her through,
That's his motto ever;
What he undertakes to do,
He does it strong and clever.

You see it takes a deal of time,
To get his dander started;
But when he's up in all his prime,
He's dreadful stubborn hearted.

Go ahead and put her through, &c.

And when a job he undertakes,
He'll do it—'tis his nature;
And whatsoever fails or breaks,
He'll mend it soon or later.

Go ahead and put her through, &c.

And then he's sure to put her through,
And do what he intended;
He keeps his object still in view,
No matter who's offended.

Go ahead and put her through, &c.

And now he's bound to Richmond town,
With many famous leaders;
To pull the rebels colors down,
And hang the mischief breeders.

Go ahead and put her through, &c.

And if he fails the thing to do,
Before our pumpkin-pie day,
Hold on—in time he'll put her through,
And do it neat and tidy.

Go ahead and put her through, &c.

Thanksgiving Day.

Again the autumn winds are sighing
A requiem for the closing year;
Again the angry cloud storm hovers
O'er meadows bleak and drear.

And once more, through His blessing
To whom we humble pray,
We gather round the festive board
On this Thanksgiving day.

O, well we know that o'er us richest blessings
Are daily showered down;
We know that ne'er were richer gems
In Autumn's golden crown.

Yet, ah! a veil of sombre sadness
Around our hearts is thrown,
That hides the sunlight of the smile
That beams from Mercy's throne.

For hands we last year warmly clasped
Now stand their country's shield;
And loving hearts that beat with ours
Now range the battle field.

And some have weary laid them down
Where rests the sun's last ray,
The call, "Come home," they may not hear
On this Thanksgiving day.

And so we gaze, with saddened hearts,
On many a vacant chair,
Once filled—some with aged forms,
And some with young and fair.

But soon the battle storm will pass
Its thunders die away;
Again the Bethlehem star of peace
Will herald forth a brighter day.

A forest of that pure bliss
Laid up for those above,
Who've passed through conflicts of the world
To that whose rule is love.

The Old Man's Growing Older.

Yes, the old man's growing older—
I was looking at him there:
His one hand resting on his staff,
The other on his chair.

He is more silent than he was,
And whiter waves his hair;
His figure seems more bending—
I was looking at him there.

His hand is not as steady,
And his eye is not as bright;
He catcheth not our joke so soon,
His foot is not as light.

Nor joineth he our song as in
The days that went all fair;
For the old man's growing older—
I was looking at him there.

Yes, the old man's growing older,
But is not less kind and true;
To all who have to do with him,
A ready welcome too.

But yet there is a tale, by time,
Upon his brow of care;
For the old man's growing older—
I was looking at him there.

Anecdotes.

A lad who was about leaving his home for college, was told to study economy—to eat beef rather than poultry. On arriving, he inquired the price of cows.

About twenty dollars.
And what is the price of partridge?
Twenty-five cents.

Of course, then, I must eat partridges.

You can't do too much for your employers, said somebody to a big-fisted, strong-backed man of all work, on the wharf one day.

Arrah, be jabbers, replied Pat, with emphasis, neither will I!

A dandy accosted an old bell man, as follows:
You take all sorts of trumpery in your cart, don't you?

Yes, jump in, jump in.
You a dentist, Bob? I did not know you were in that trade.

Yes, said Bob; I follow no other business but setting teeth—in beef, potatoes, bread and such like.

The Old Woman.

Gray-haired and very old she was,
With many a wrinkle where
The rose and lily once had bloomed,
When life's young morn was there;
And often from her dim old eyes
Methought there fell a tear
Upon her knitting work, that told
Of memories fond and dear.

And oft her bosom heaved a sigh,
As from the open door
She watched the little ones at play,
As she had played of yore.
She knew that creaking clogs would come
To spoil the castles fair
Their little hearts were building high,
For they were built of air.

She had been young; and children dear,
She called her own, had crept
Behind her chair to "hide and seek,"—
No wonder that she wept;
For they were dead, and these brought back
The memory of their tone,
And drew those tears to bathe the flowers
In memory's garden sown.

Weary of Life.

Weary of life, yet fondly to it clinging;
Weary of life, yet weeping at its close;
Dreading the hour that our last rest is bringing,
Urging its coming—fearing its repose.

Weary of life, yet begging it to tarry;
Weary of life yet trembling at its flight;
Sighing "neath burdens that we cannot carry,
Weary of life, yet dreading more the night.

Weary of life; O, Father in high heaven,
Bridge o'er the darkness with one ray of light;
Weary of life, O keep me at its even—
O give me stars with my untraveled night.

Scraps.

The best throw at dice is—to throw them away.

The time when the wind is most destructive to forests is when it is chopping round.

To be candid, speak of the present as though they were absent. To be charitable, speak of the absent as though they were present.

In a village in Litchfield county recently, Mrs. H. being asked what was the news, replied as follows: "News? why haven't you heard that Yorktown is vaccinated, and McClellan is marching on with his cavalry in front and his infants behind, and after two or three squirmishes we shall beat them?"

A laugh is worth a hundred groans in any state of the market.

Poverty wants some, luxury many, and avarice all things.

To relieve the oppressed, is the most glorious act a man is capable of; it is in some measure doing the business of God and Providence.

When a horse's age is in question, he is generally judged out of his own mouth.

Conceit is to nature what paint is to beauty; it is not only needless, but impairs what it would improve.

It is better to be born with a disposition to set things on the favorable side, than to an estate of ten thousand a year.

Religion is like the firmament; the more it exercises the more stars are seen; it is like the sea; the more one views it the more boundless it appears.

Brown says that while he has gone to the war as a private, his wife remains at home a left tenant.

Childhood often holds a truth with its feeble fingers, which the grasp of manhood cannot retain; which it is the pride of utmost age to recover.

Some one says, it is well that we are not all perfect, for if we were, we should be so intolerably proud of it that there would be no getting along with us.

A Western editor, who received an impatient letter from an unknown source, signed "Dinky," requested an interview with the writer by inquiring at whose stable he might be found.

Very bad spelling is sometimes the best, as in the case of the English beer-vender, who wrote over his shop door: "Beer sold here." Tom Hood, who saw it, said it was spelled right, because the fluid he sold was his own brain.

Miscellaneous.

The Ways of Managing Husbands.

Few things are more common in domestic life, than for the husband and wife to strive for the mastery; and thus human beings, who ought to assist each other, and dwell together in affection, frequently pass a life of discord in rendering each other unhappy.

The husband who is not greatly influenced by a prudent and affectionate helpmate, is unworthy of her; and the wife who so far forgets herself as to try to rule her husband, will not increase her happiness by usurping his authority. The husband, when he is aware that his wife has more prudence, judgment, and talent, than himself, does well to avail himself of them, by leaving to her the management of affairs requiring the exercise of these qualities. It is a purely selfish motive that actuates either husband or wife to rule each other—and yet this motive, unworthy as it is, exerts its baneful influence in ten thousand times ten thousand hearts.

Mr. Connor was a well meaning man, of very little energy of character, and was completely under the control of his wife. Mrs. Connor was continually boasting that no man should rule her; that she took care to let her husband see that she had spirit, and that she could make him do what she liked at any time. Poor Mr. Connor submitted to this thralldom very patiently, rather than contend with her, for when he did try to contend with her, she got into such dreadful passions that she actually terrified him. To secure his own peace he consented to her ruling him, and rule him she did in every thing.

Mr. Cooper, a neighbor, was fond of laughing at Mr. Connor's weakness. Would I, he often said, be such a poor, spiritless being as to be ruled by my wife? No, never! Poor Connor dare not say the sun shines, without first asking leave of his wife; but my wife knows pretty well that my will must be obeyed. Now this very positive over-bearing disposition on Cooper's part enabled his wife to manage him easily; if she wanted to stay at home, she proposed to go out, when he immediately determined not to stir a foot out of doors, to show he was master; if she really wished a walk, she had only to request him to allow her to finish what she was engaged in within doors, and he would put on his hat, and in a dictatorial manner tell her to put on her bonnet.

Mrs. Connor and Mrs. Cooper once agreed to have a day's pleasure; it was therefore settled between them that their husbands should take them to a place of public resort, about twelve miles distant. It was only necessary for Mrs. Connor to express her intention in a determined way, when her husband, to avoid a quarrel, agreed directly to drive her over. Mrs. Cooper, however, went another way to work. She was determined to go, and spoke to her husband as follows: Would you believe, said she, that our neighbors, the Connors, are silly enough to spend a whole day in a visit to Bluff Springs; they mean to go to-morrow. Says Mr. Cooper, I do not know there is anything so silly in it; if I felt disposed to go there or any where else, I would go. Certainly, said Mrs. Cooper, you might go, but you would not be so unreasonable as to take me there against my will. Against your will, indeed! said Mr. Cooper; a wife ought to have no will but that of her husband; if I thought proper for you to go, you should go. Excuse me, said Mrs. Connor, you have had your own way too much; if I were determined not to go, you would find some trouble in persuading me. Trouble in persuading you, said Cooper; then I am resolved to go, and you shall go too. I will have my way, Mrs. Cooper, no wife in the world shall control me; so to-morrow morning prepare to go to the Springs, for whether you will or not, there shall you go. Mr. Cooper, said his wife, I know when you take a thing into your head you will have your own way; I never yet met with so determined a man.

Well, retorted Mr. Cooper, I will, I will have a chance at the door at eight o'clock. In the morning Mr. and Mrs. Connor set off, and soon after the Coopers. Mr. Cooper fully determined to convince his wife that he was master; his wife secretly delighted to think how well she had managed him.

There are too many wives, who are either like Mrs. Cooper, or like Mrs. Connor; and too many husbands, who either drive, or are driven. Selfishness on one part begets selfishness on the other. A tyrannical husband makes his wife either broken-spirited or cunning. An exacting wife changes even a good husband into a dissipated or unmanly one. There should be mutual consideration for each other's wishes on both sides; and without this, indeed, true or permanent happiness, in the married state, is impossible. Neither husband nor wife should ever think of managing the other.

Whenever you drink be sure you have your nose above water.

Thanksgiving Sermon.

BY REV. E. P. THWING.

Psalms, 147 Chapter 20 Verse.
"He hath not dealt so with any nation."
This jubilant psalm is an appropriate hymn of thanksgiving for us on this day of social and national praise. Our own history not less than that of the Jewish theocracy exhibits the wonderful loving kindness of God.—The colony at Plymouth was the first to revive the ancient custom of an annual Thanksgiving after the manner of the Jews at the feast of Ingathering. Latterly this time-honored festival has had less of a religious character. The home circle is the center of attraction and it is well that it should be so; but still there is a propriety in a public recognition of the divine goodness, according to the custom of our fathers and the suggestion of our Executive.

I. We owe a debt of gratitude to God for our ancestral history. We are aware of the tendency of human pride to boast of lineage and of blood, and to unduly exalt the circumstances of birth and nationality; yet the man is not to be envied who has perused the history of our country, especially that of New England, has read the lives of our noble progenitors, and looked on localities made sacred by heroic deeds, yet

Whose heart has no'er within him burned,
Who never to himself hath said
This is my own, my native land!

One historic feature of the Puritans was their enthusiastic devotion to the maintenance of free institutions. The testimony of Home is valuable on this point. They were, also, profoundly pious men, and esteemed the truth as it is in Jesus beyond all price, for love of which many willingly went to the stake, while others suffered a living martyrdom. The journal of the Pilgrims is full of touching incidents of their incredible hardships. One half their number died during the first twenty weeks; seven times as many graves were dug for the dead, as there were houses erecting for the living. Yet out of death came life, for God was with them. Again, our ancestral history displays in an eminent degree the providential guidance of God. The overthrow of the Papal power in England during the reign of Henry VIII; the persecutions under Mary which drove the Reformers into exile; their disappointment at the policy of Elizabeth, and still more at the treatment received from the Stuart family; the thwarting of the plans of the ex-patriated Puritans at Leyden, in reference to going to the West Indies and to Guiana; the wonderful opening of New England at that juncture, and the diminution by small pox of the Massachusetts tribe of Indians from thirty thousand fighting men to three hundred, are some of the evidences of providential favor with which our history is luminous, and for which we are summoned to-day to give thanks.

2. We should thank God that he is making, to so great a degree, the character of the English Puritan colonist the type of our advancing civilization. Much that was external and merely local has passed away. The hand of time has softened many of the sharp and angular features of his character. Modifications of society have resulted from the infusion of continental life by immigration, yet there is still one prevailing type, there is a nucleus around which foreign ingredients form and from which they take their character. The English language is fast becoming universal. The supremacy of its literature is everywhere noticeable. Prof. Edwards has well called our language the religious language. Its influence is felt in every part of the earth. The descendants of the English Puritans have always been a migratory people and carry with them the features of New England society. Thanksgiving day is no longer a New England festival merely. It is observed throughout the United States and Canada. All these facts confirm the above statement. We believe, too, that the present war will bring to the now disloyal states a purified civilization, not only by wonderful changes in society as it now exists there, but by the introduction of New England elements. The present rebellion, direful as it is, is not an unmixed evil.

3. Lastly, we should be grateful for the hopeful anticipations which the history of the past and a review of the present inspire. There are, indeed, plaintive notes which mingle with our song of thanksgiving. There are sins, public and private, to be deplored; violations of probity and honesty; fraud and corruption, infidelity and wickedness in our land; above all that execrable system of human slavery, which fattens on the blood and souls of its victims, and then—viper-like, turns back on its own bone and blood. Yet there are evidences of a quickening of moral sensibility in reference to the enormity of these sins, and a reassertion of the first principles of the Gospel of Christ. God will overrule to his glory every untoward event. We rejoice, too, in the missionary aspects of our times and in the increased attention to the cause of popular education and philanthropic effort. We may here find our warrant for thanksgiving and praise to-day, and anticipate with joy the advent of Him under whose sway the earth shall again be like Eden, when Jerusalem shall be purged from blood, and joy and gladness be found in her, thanksgiving and the voice of melody, for the whole earth shall be filled with his glory.

Beauty of the Sea.

There is a charm in the sea. The freedom there is in its billows, the music there is in its roar; its round horizon bearded with white foam, red with the wine of morning light; the ruby sun descends into its waters and dissolves; the ship so like a bird, that spreads its white wings and skirts the sea-en circled world; the wild tales of strange lands and strange adventures; the gems and gold that strewn its caves; the coral groves touched with eternal sunset; the bubbles that have broken upon its surface and released the parting souls; all these have shrouded the sea with a mysterious charm.

And then to think that the sea is the memory of the world; that an angel's voice shall summon it—and it shall surrender its dead to air and light again; that the lower half of heaven is hidden like a jewelled cup in its bosom; and the ever-going sun has worn no path thence, and the long caravan of ages left no footprint as it went.

For the Patriot.

Is It So?

BY LINDA LINDAN.

"When you see women talking together at the corner of the street, you may know they are slandering the minister's or squire's wife."

Now who do you think will ever believe that? Just tell us how you ever found it out, Mr. Know-it-all? I know it isn't so. Slandering the minister's wife, indeed! Is she not always above the reach of scandal,—pretty, sociable, and good—and don't every one love and respect her? How very absurd you are!

And the Squire's wife—what can people say against her? Is she not a real lady? Don't she dress neatly and fashionably—go to church every Sabbath, and visit all her neighbors, from the doctor's wife in the "big brick," to the washerwoman in the cabin? Don't she know just what to administer to every sick child, and how to comfort its half-distracted mother? Are not she and the minister's wife at the head of every charitable movement, and don't they do more in their quiet way, for the relief of the poor and unfortunate, than all you "ladies of creation" in town? To be sure they do, and you dare not deny it; and you know too, that women are too reasonable to be scandalizing such people. How do you know what they have to talk about? There are a thousand and one pleasant subjects of conversation that you in your verdancy never thought of.

But here let me remind you that it is very seldom that women are seen standing on the corners of the street. These favorite places of resort are generally monopolized by a set of chaps—some in broadcloth, beavers and perfumery—others in rags, slouched hats and dirt, whose business it is to twirl their canes, cigars and mustaches, smoke their black pipes, talk, laugh, swagger and swear, and make remarks upon every lady that may chance to pass—complimentary of course; and when tired of this, saunter off to the billiard table, ice cream saloon, or restaurant; or if it be in the country, these dignified personages may aspire to a game of marbles or football—anything for recreation.

Now women, if they chance to meet in the street, may stop to chat a moment, perhaps about the last new bonnets at Smith's, (which by-the-way, are most ridiculous looking affairs) inquire where Mrs. So-and-so purchased that beautiful shawl, or remark about Mr. Beecher's last splendid sermon in the Independent. And what if they should say that Mr. S., though a professed Christian, lets his love of money make him forget to be honest; or that another of the brethren is often cruel and unmerciful—not only to his horses and cattle, but to his wife, (hope she don't fear him, more than I do your insulting remarks) and that he ought to be reproved for his barbarity—what if they do say it? It is true, just as true as that you are a fault-finding, invidious old bachelor!

Oh, I assure you, women have enough to talk about without slandering good people like the minister's or squire's wife; and if you were away in Uncle Sam's service, where you ought to be if you are half a man in strength and courage, or engaged in any respectable business, you would not find so much time to spend in watching innocent people, or prying into matters that don't in the least concern you. Now try it; for of all mortal creatures, a lazy, good-for-nothing, busy-body, is the most contemptible.

LOAMI, ILLINOIS, NOVEMBER, 1862.

The Paper Panic.

The scarcity of cotton and rags is increasing the price of printing paper at such a rate that newspapers generally are advancing their charges for subscription. The Government tax on advertising is another burden which comes upon publishers with severity, and may have the effect eventually to deprive to a considerable extent the poorer classes of that luxury heretofore exclusively American—a cheap daily paper. A paper manufacturer in Buffalo thus explains the subject:

"It is well known that paper cannot be produced and afforded at less than ten cents a pound, with rags at three cents. The advance upon printing paper is about twenty-five per cent, while rags have exceeded that figure. Add to that, the supply of rags is very far short of the demand.

"The high rate of exchange shuts off importations, and the country is deprived of two millions dollars worth of foreign rags, which have formerly been annually consumed.

"Then again, the short supply, and consequently high price of cotton, has taxed the ingenuity of people, and the great quantities of material formerly used in the manufacture of paper, is now picked into shoddy and used as a substitute for cotton. Cotton and linen shoddy is freely used in the manufacture of wooden goods, and where this passion for shoddy will finally lead us, let the reader guess.

"The appreciation of paper stock, as a consequence of the depreciation of the national currency, might be naturally expected; but who can provide for a people hungry for cotton and willing and anxious to take shoddy as a substitute.

"This writer says ingenuously will supply a remedy for the high cost of paper. He says straw will be a good substitute for rags, and manufacturers will soon have suitable machinery. Straw paper, however, is a very inferior article. The specimens made thus far are still and brittle, yielding to the least strain. But if it can be used to any considerable extent, the pressure on the market will be sensibly relieved and perhaps prices be kept within moderate bounds."

Startling Discovery.

During the sitting of a Court in Connecticut, not long ago, on a very cold evening, a crowd of lawyers had collected around the open fire that blazed cheerfully on the hearth in the bar room when a traveller entered beamed with cold, but no one moved to give him room to warm his shins, so he leaned against the wall in the back part of the room.

Presently a smart young hub of the law addressed him, and the following dialogue took place:

You look like a traveler.
Well, I suppose I am; I am all the way from Wisconsin about at my rate.

From Wisconsin! What a distance to come on a pair of legs?

Well, I done it anyhow.

Did you ever pass through h—ll in any of your travels?

Yes sir, I have been through the outskirts. I thought likely. Well what are the manners and customs there? Some of us would like to know.

Oh, you'll find them much the same as in this place—the lawyers sit nearest the fire!

Follow the Right

No matter who you are, what your lot, or where you live; you cannot afford to do that which is wrong. The only way to obtain happiness and pleasure for yourself is to do the right thing. You may not always hit the mark; but you should nevertheless, always aim for it, and with every trial your skill will increase. Whether you are to be praised or blamed for it by others; whether it will seemingly make you richer or poorer, or whether no other person than yourself knows of your action, still, always, and in all cases, do the right thing. Your first lessons in this rule will sometimes seem hard, but they will grow easier, until finally doing the right thing will become a habit, and to do a thing wrong will become an impossibility.

Deal Gently.

We pity the man or woman, who, having been stung by a great misfortune, staggers forth in the world unaided by any friendly arm, striving courageously to bear up with the sympathy which no human being can long exist and dispense with, and yet cut off from seeking it, or even accepting it, should it come in their way, because explanation or confession would involve a sacrilegious invasion of the heart-history of another. They only who have waded through deep waters of trouble, alone, know from the deprivation of it the might of human sympathy to roll off the surging billows. But pent up tears—suppressed groans—a fettered tongue

a throbbing heart with ever an iron hand upon it—God pity such, for He alone knows what they suffer. And so, if we hear a pathetic word—or look upon an unsmiling face, or meet no glad response to our wayward mirth—let us not condemn, nor measure grudgingly our kindness even to such. Every heart knoweth its own bitterness, and we may all unconsciously, or in thoughtlessness, have ridden rough-shod over some prostrate sufferer.

Shrewd.

A minister had travelled far to preach to a congregation. After the sermon he had waited very patiently expecting some of the brethren to invite him home to dinner. In this, however, he was disappointed. One and another departed, until the house was almost empty. Summoning resolution, however, he walked up to an elderly looking gentleman and gravely said:

"Will you go home with me to dinner, to-day, brother?"

"Where do you live?"

"About twenty miles from this."

"No," said the man, coloring, "but you must go home with me."

"Thank you; I will cheerfully."

After that time the minister was no more troubled about his dinner.

Making a Needle.

Needles are made of steel wire. The wire is first cut by shears, from coils, into the length of the needles to be made. After a batch of such bits of wire have been cut off they are placed in a hot furnace and then taken out and rolled backward and forward on a table till they are straight. They are now to be ground. The needle pointer then takes up two dozen or so of the wires and rolls them between his thumb and fingers, with their ends on the grindstone—first one end and then the other. Next is a machine which flattens and gutters the heads of ten thousand needles in an hour. Next comes the punching of the eyes, by a boy, so fast that the eye can hardly keep pace with him. The splitting follows, which is running a fine wire through a dozen perhaps of these twin needles. A woman with a little awl before her files between the heads and separates them.

They are now complete needles, but they are rough and rusty, and easily bent. The hardening comes next. They are heated in a furnace, and when red hot are thrown into a pan of cold water. Next they must be tempered, and this is done by rolling them backward and forward on a hot metal plate. The polishing still remains to be done. On a very coarse cloth needles are spread to the number of forty to fifty thousand. Emery dust is strewn over them, oil is sprinkled and soft soap is daubed over; the cloth is rolled hard up, and with several others of the same kind thrown into a sort of wash-pot to roll to and fro twelve hours or more. They come out dirty enough, but after a rinsing in clean hot water, and tossing in sawdust, they become bright, and are ready to be sorted and put up for sale.

Advice.

If your coat is comfortable, wear it two or three months longer; no matter if the gloss is off. If you have no wife, get one; if you have, God bless her, stay at home with her, instead of spending your evenings in expensive flat footlees. Be honest, frugal, plain; seek content and happiness at home; be industrious and persevering; and if your circumstances are now embarrassed, they will soon become easy, no matter who may be Premier, or what may be the price of stocks.

Expected Disappointments.

What you are prepared for rarely happens. The precise thing you expect comes not once in a thousand times. A confused state of mind results from long experience of such cases. Your real feeling often is: Such a thing seems quite sure to happen; I may say I expect it to happen, and yet I don't expect it, because I do; for experience has taught me the precise thing which I expect—which I think most likely, hardly ever comes. I am not prepared to side with a thoughtless world, which is ready to laugh at the confused statement of the Irishman who had killed his pig. It is not a bull—it is a great psychological fact that is involved in his seeming contradictory declaration: It did not weigh as much as I expected, and I never thought it would.—Boyd.

But I'm greatly in need of corn just now, as my mare is nearly starved, and nobody round here, please willing to trade. I thought you Quaker fellows was chock full of the milk of human kindness. Now as I've been robbed back here a piece of all my cash, I don't know what on air I'm goin' to do when the mare's gin out.

We'll, friend, said the shrewd Quaker, if there has anything that I can turn to the same account as my corn, I will trade with thee at a dollar a bushel, but not otherwise.

And pray what are you going to do with it? Grind it, to be sure! said broad-brim, chuckling at the thought that that was a poser for the pedler.

Wall, I'll dew it on them terms, and you may empty your corn in my feed box at once, said the Yankee.

And pray, friend, what am I to have in exchange for the two bushels of corn that I can turn to the same account? After the ceremonies the remains were carried to the ancient cemetery, near the Town House.

Mr. Carver was for many years a citizen of this place, where he leaves a wife and two children to mourn his loss. He was an affectionate husband, a kind and indulgent father, and through industry and integrity had won a large circle of friends. Since he enlisted in the cause of his Country, he has suffered much; first with the rheumatism for months, and lastly for weeks from the mortal wound received while leading his brave comrades on to victory. His last words were as follows:—

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Dec. 6th, 1862.

"Born to no Master, of no Sect am I."

A WORD WITH OUR PATRONS. To the equity, which has of late been repeatedly put to us: "Do you intend to fall into the arrangement of other journals, by an advance in the price of your paper?" Our answer is, not at present. Although the great increase in the price of almost every article required in the publication of our paper, would justify such a course: still, by promptness on the part of our subscribers in cancelling the small sums due us; their influence in extending our circulation, with the same liberal patronage extended to us by our advertising patrons as heretofore—we shall take courage, and endeavor to struggle through the difficulty, rather than shift the burden from our own to the shoulders of our patrons. It will require great prudence and many sacrifices before we arrive to the end; but by fostering a spirit of economy and encouraging a feeling of emulation in all to discharge manfully their allotted share of the responsibilities of the hour, much may be done to avert the evils of hard times, and hasten the return of better, and a more prosperous state of affairs. The New York Herald and our neighbor at Abington, we believe take this view of the matter—we shall follow their example.

FURTHER PARTICULARS OF THE DORCHESTER MURDER. The late terrible tragedy at the Lower Mills, of which Mr. Abel Hocking, a cabinet maker, was the unfortunate victim, continues to create excitement throughout the town. Many of the leading citizens of the place are anxious that no effort shall be spared in ferreting out the perpetrator of this deed. The Selectmen of Dorchester, have offered a reward of $500 for any information that shall lead to the conviction of the guilty party or parties. There is a general feeling existing there against one individual who, it is thought, is aware of more facts connected with the murder than he cares about disclosing. At the corner's inquest, it will be recollected, that Mr. Hall, the employer of Hocking, testified that he left Mr. Hocking at work in his shop at seven minutes past nine, on the evening of the murder, and went directly home and went to bed, and the next he knew of the affair was when he was informed of Mr. Hocking being hurt shortly after, the same evening, while still in bed. He has subsequently told other parties that he did not go directly home from his cabinet shop, but went to another house in the same vicinity, where he boarded, to see a Mrs. Burgess, and that he stayed there fifteen or twenty minutes, and then went home and went to bed. Mrs. Burgess is positive that Mr. Hall left her house at half past nine; and Mr. Templeman, with whom Hall boarded, is equally positive that he did not come home until near ten o'clock, although his house is scarcely ten feet from Mrs. Burgess'. The groans of Hocking was first heard about five minutes past ten, and he was left safely at work in his shop at seven minutes past nine, therefore the murder must have been committed during the intervening hour. This intervening hour, or a portion of it, at least, is, unfortunately for Mr. Hall, the one for which he fails to give a satisfactory account of himself.

TOTAL ECLIPSE OF THE MOON. Early this morning the moon throughout the United States was "totally" eclipsed. The moon did not, however, wholly disappear, but continued faintly visible, rayless, and in color and appearance resembling a tarnished copper disc. Indeed, it has been estimated that only about nine tenths of the light of the moon is intercepted when our satellite is wholly immersed in the shadow of the earth.

Sergeant Charles W. Carver.

The remains of Sergeant Carver arrived in this place on Saturday morning and was buried with military honors on Tuesday last. The funeral procession was formed at the residence of his wife's father—Mr. William Field—headed by the Quincy Brass Band; then came a detachment of the Hancock Light Guard and a large body of the "Home Guard," then the hearse draped with that glorious old flag—the stars and stripes—followed by a long train of carriages bearing the mourners. The remains were carried into the Town Hall, were services under the Spiritualist order were held. Mrs. Townsend, the Medium, offered some excellent remarks, and others that were not so good, but inappropriate and entirely out of place on such an occasion, in our opinion, but still may be all right in the minds of many.

After the ceremonies the remains were carried to the ancient cemetery, near the Town House.

Mr. Carver was for many years a citizen of this place, where he leaves a wife and two children to mourn his loss. He was an affectionate husband, a kind and indulgent father, and through industry and integrity had won a large circle of friends. Since he enlisted in the cause of his Country, he has suffered much; first with the rheumatism for months, and lastly for weeks from the mortal wound received while leading his brave comrades on to victory. His last words were as follows:—

"Dear Friends—This garment (his coat,) I wore on the 20th of September, on the unfortunate reconnaissance across the Potomac, at Sharpsburg, at which time I received this mortal wound at the hands of the rebels. It is and has been a source of much gratification, yes, even pleasure to me, to know that I received my death wound while doing all in my power to maintain the integrity of our noble Constitution, and the honor of our glorious flag. Do not think, dear friends, that I am afraid to die. Oh, no! It is hard to leave my dear family and friends, but I do not fear to die, for I know that I have a home in Heaven, where there is no more sorrow or sighing, and where all is love, joy and peace forevermore."

DISTINGUISHED STRANGERS. Among the distinguished strangers present at the funeral of Sergeant Carver, were L. B. Schwabe, Esq., accompanied by Colonel Huntington and Major Bradford, of the United States Army. Mr. Schwabe is the gentleman who takes such a great interest in the welfare of our gallant soldiers; he has taken quite an interest from the starting of the 15th Regiment till the present time.

The New York Tribune, September 11th, in speaking of him, says: "This gentleman is quite a military man, and belongs to one of the oldest military families in Germany." There is hardly a Brigade in our army, where there is not a Regiment or Company that has not received a generous gift from him, either in clothing, canteens, or hospital stores.

Count Schwabe's name will be endeared by our brave soldiers for generations to come. He visits the camps, and if he finds some brave and good private, has him through his influence promoted; and many a good officer is now thanking him for their promotion. He takes great interest in the hospitals at the seat of war and at home; and procures employment for the wounded and disabled, when capable—to prevent them from becoming either an object of charity or dissipation.

PRESENTATION. We are pleased to learn that our worthy townsman, the proprietor of the Quincy Market House, has, during the present week, been made the recipient of a new and unapproachable style of watch and chain; one that a prince need not turn up his nose at. It exceeds any watch we have yet seen—for it not only contains metals and minerals, but has a vegetable attachment, for which a patent is supposed to be pending. In some respects, it excels our Town Clock—for it is right twice within the twenty-four hours, while the clock was never known to be.

Long may Fred. live to enjoy its beautiful proportions and unique adornings.

CHRISTMAS IS COMING. So is winter, judging from our experience of the last few days. Ice is forming fast, and the air is full of frost. If signs never fail in their season, we would say with our almanac makers, "Look out soon for a big snow storm."

PLEASE. What is more pleasing to a lady than a neat fitting boot? We know of no place where they will be more likely to find such than at Cumming's new store, where will be found the largest assortment of Boots and Shoes in this vicinity.

NICKEL CENTS. Nickels are coined at the Philadelphia mint at the rate of $2500 worth a day. Nevertheless they are so scarce that eight per cent. premium is often paid for them.

CONSUMED. Why is it that ladies in search for boots or shoes go to Cumming's first? Because out of his large variety they are sure of finding what they want.

TAKE NOTICE. A Free Lunch at the Mariposa Saloon this evening.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, December 4, 1862.

It is curious and inexplicable to those outside of the Republican party ranks, how Secretary Seward, the President's Prime Minister, is sacrificed by certain of the President's political friends. What has he done? Is he too little or too much anti-Slavery for his traducers? He is represented as an optimist—not without sagacity in intellectual problems, but foolish in affairs; in other words, wise in ideas and silly in things; an idealist—rich in the top of his brain, lean and feeble in the bottom. But here it is a little more plain. "Without wisdom in the direction of public affairs, he had such scuteness, ingenuity and mind force, that his criticisms weighed much in the shaping of other men's practical policies, and like all uninspired prophets, the failure of his predictions abated no jot of confidence in his prevision, and he still covered old disappointments with new promises. He was at once the zealot and coward of the Administration." It is difficult to imagine correctly, how far Mr. Seward has departed from the true Republican faith, to deserve such castigation from many of his political friends. His duties as Secretary of State are difficult and delicate—more so than any predecessor since the days of Washington. His foreign correspondence, so far as is known, has been able and dignified. He has proved himself a finished statesman—but, perhaps, is not radical enough for the one idea portion of his own partisans. His duty is plain; to stand by the Constitution he swore to obey when the exalted trusts relative to foreign affairs were committed to him as Secretary of State. We believe him to be a Union man, having no right to exercise powers which the Constitution does not give to him. There is no geographical partition to separate our States into nations. We are the same in religion, customs and language; a separation would be a calamity awful in its consequences beyond description. We know not Mr. Seward's views on the President's Emancipation measure. We humbly expressed our belief when it appeared of its unconstitutionality. The abolition of Slavery should not be accomplished by illegal measures. Better the Union with Slavery, than hopeless disunion without Slavery.

The second Annual Message of President Lincoln, received here on Monday, has passed through the usual ordeal of editorial criticism. The Message is short, and the best for style, he has written. Slavery as was expected is the great topic; regarding it as an implacable foe of the American Union—that the slave power must die in order that the Republic may live. He belongs to the old school of Henry Clay as a gradual emancipationist—if he proposes, unlike the sentiments of his Proclamation, to leave the fact, time, mode and concomitants of emancipation to the wisdom of the States. "The liberation of slaves (says the Message) is the destruction of property—property acquired by descent or by purchase, the same as any other property. It is no less true for having been often said, that the people of the South are no more responsible for the original introduction of this property than are the people of the North, and when it is remembered how unhesitatingly we, all of us, use cottons, and share the profits of dealing in them, it may not be quite safe to say that the South has been more responsible than the North for its continuance." Sensible man. The Boston Transcript, speaking with favor on the Message as a whole, says, "The Colonization scheme of the President is open to one objection which seems to us conclusive. It implies a vast exportation of laborers—the very class of men we can least spare. To expatriate, at great expense, any portion of the creators of wealth is a suicidal policy."

His financial scheme, uniting "Bank with State," will meet with great opposition. Indeed, the Message will hardly please the ultras of either party, being too mild in its suggestions, and too conservative for the radicals. It will be heartily approved or spurned with execration to suit the tastes of politicians.

ADVERTISING. A successful business man who has tried it, writes with regard to advertising: "Give me the field when but few advertisers occupy it, and I care not how hard the times are. It pays me at all times, and especially it pays me when most of the business men in my line have taken their hooks out of the water, thinking no bites are to be had." This is the truth, exactly. As well might a fish swim without fins, a woman talk without a tongue, or a dog bark without wagging his tail, as a man to make money without advertising.

A LIVING MERMAID was recently sold in London for ten pounds. It was a very small maid, however, being confined in a glass globe, filled with salt water. It is a fish from Sumatra, about four inches long, shaped much like the fabulous mermaid, with hands like those of a frog—with a monkey looking face, and about a dozen hairs on its head. It was bought for Mr. Barnum, of New York.

SICK AND WOUNDED SOLDIERS COMING. It is understood that 10,000 or 12,000 sick and wounded soldiers are to be immediately removed from Washington to the hospitals at the North.

An Appeal to the Charitable.

For the Patriot.

Women of Quincy. Many miles from our comfortable Northern homes, is an immense army, which is composed of men who have been born and reared at the North; men who have all known the comforts, many of them the luxuries of life. They have never known an hour's sickness, unless tender hands were ready to nurse them. Now they have left their work, their homes, their wives, children and friends, to fight to maintain our country in her hour of need. Miles away from us, exposed to the fatigues of long marches, the inclemencies of the weather, with insufficient food and scanty clothing, is our army.

While they are working for us, shall we not work for them? To know that of all the women of Quincy, so small a number has worked for the soldiers, reflects but little credit upon us. It is, as letter after letter comes to us, laden with tales of sorrow and suffering; as the bell tolls the requiem of our noble dead; as the Quincy boys come home pale and wan, from their hard labors, we can not be roused to a sense of duty; then Quincy's annals in this war will reflect little credit to her women. Let us all serve our country this winter! Has one many household cares, there are a few minutes daily when she can knit, and thus by improving every minute, a pair of soldiers' stockings could be added to our stock. Let all give up visiting, dressing, reading and the Opera, and for this winter, work for our army. I know many who have labored night and day for the soldiers, while others, whom I know, have but little work to do, yet idle away hour after hour. This war may make noble women, as well as brave men. Will not every one commence next week to improve every leisure moment for the relief of our army? Then as spring dawns we can indulge in the pleasing thought that we too have worked for our country.

NO WINTER QUARTERS. A Washington correspondent says the President, the War Department and Gen. Burnside are united in the view that the army of the Potomac must not go into winter quarters. The present delay, owing to certain changes in the situation, is only to take such steps as will insure the vigorous and successful prosecution of the advance when it recommences.

THAT'S WHAT'S THE MATTER. We have at last found out the origin of this popular phrase. A friend of ours, who had been absent all winter, returning a few days since, called upon an estimable lady friend. He was surprised to find her confined to a sick bed. After the first salutations were over, our friend remarked: "Why, Mrs. —, I am very sorry to find you ill—what is the matter?" Quickly reaching over to the back of the bed, the invalid turned down the coverlet, disclosing a beautiful infant, wrapped in the embrace of the rosy god, and said triumphantly, "That's what's the matter."—La Crosse Democrat.

ARRIVED. More of those Ladies' French calf double-sole Balmors, which are sold at the low price of $2.25 at Cumming's, but are not expected to remain long.

Deaths.

In this town, on the 29th ult., Mrs. Hannah Porter, aged 85 years.

On the 1st inst., Mrs. Hannah, wife of Mr. Joseph Richardson, aged 66 years.

Passed to the spirit life, on the 26th ult., Mr. Charles W. Carver, aged 37 years.

He left the mortal form at Sharpsburg, (Md.) which was brought to this town, by his devoted and suffering wife, to be interred in the soil of his native clime. He gave his life cheerfully to his Country, and said he was happy to die in the cause of Freedom. He was an honest, worthy man, respected and loved by all who knew him. It was his oft repeated request, that I should officiate at his funeral, and I was surprised to learn that the use of a church was refused, wherein to pay the last tribute to the remains of one who had laid down his life for his Country. May God and His holy Angels comfort the bereaved ones, and hasten the day when God's children can all be permitted to enter their Father's house on earth as well as in Heaven.

CONGRESSMEN IN THE WAR. The number of Congressmen and ex-Congressmen who have been or are now military officers is ninety-four; a very large majority of whom have served or are now serving in the rebel army.

HARD TIMES. We are beginning now-a-days to see the tragic realities of Hood's "Song of a Shirt." Army shirts are now given out to sewing girls at sixty cents per dozen—and a smart girl can make only a dozen per week. Who wonders at starving suicides.

KEROSENE OIL. Furnel on Washington street has a prime article—in fact, he keeps no other. The high figure at which this oil has recently been quoted, we are informed, is not owing to a scarcity of the material from which it is manufactured, but in consequence of a suspension during the summer, of a number of works of the most extensive refiners. They have resumed, however again, and we soon shall hear of a great reduction in the price.

TO HORSE OWNERS. DR. SWEET'S INFALLIBLE LINIMENT

For Horses is unrivaled by any, in all cases of Lameness, arising from Sprains, Bruises or Wrenching, its effect is magical and certain. Harness or Saddle Galls, Scratches, Mange, &c. it will also cure speedily. Sprain and Ringbone may be easily prevented and cured in their incipient stages, but confirmed cases are beyond the possibility of a radical cure. No case of the kind, however, is so desperate or hopeless but it may be alleviated by this Liniment, and its faithful application will always remove the Lameness, and enable the horse to travel with comparative ease.

Every horse owner should have this remedy at hand, for its timely use at the first appearance of Lameness will effectually prevent those formidable diseases mentioned, to which all horses are liable, and which render so many otherwise valuable horses nearly worthless.

Poetry.

Giving the Mitten.

She gave him the mitten, the villagers said,
And that they alleged was the reason
Why Ray Allis went as a private last spring.
To fight for suppression of treason.

Whether gossip spoke idly or wisely, 'twas true
That his glance grew calmer and colder,
And smiles never more to his lips came again,
Since the day he enlisted a soldier.

And June Dashiway—well, what said she the while?
She smiled, but she trembled all over,
And tore the pale tresses to flowery snow
When they spoke of her wondering lover.

Listened—pressing her bodice tight over her heart,
When the wire thrilled the grim battle's story
Of Lexington lost, of its heroes laid low,
Meeting death on the red field of glory.

The winter came on, and pitying hearts
Told of soldiers wan, weary, frost-bitten;
And June stole away to her grandmother's side,
To ask—"Couldn't I knit a mitten?"

Ray Allis is coming on sick soldier's leave—
How quickly the bright needles quiver!
"I'll soon have them done, and one man less On guard, then, shall tremble and shiver."

"But Ray must not know that this heart, turning tutor,
Takes back all those hasty words spoken!
I said I would never be his, if he went—
I must keep the rash promise unbroken!"

I'll take them to him to see if they fit,
Or, if need be, some stitches to alter,
And if he is better, and happy at heart,
I know my speech will not falter.

"But should he be, instead, very sorry or sick,
Or look very weary and lonely—
Stay, am I quite sure I can meet him again?
Courage, June, for a brief moment only!"

"Friend Ray, will you try them? I knit them for you."
A smile lit his face, sad and sober,
While holding his hand tightly over his own,
The kneeling form trembling all over.

"This fit very well—the other let's try—"
He threw back his cloak—"June Dashiway,
dear,
One mitten henceforth and forever!"

And now couldn't I such a sweet story tell!
How the girl, with her eyes softly shining,
Crept closely beside the arm lonely for aye,
Around it her slight fingers twining—

And murmured some words in a womanish way,
Something all about soldiers and glory;
And then, that the mitten might not want a hand,
She gave him her own! That's the story.

A Mother's Love.

I do marvel how a mother,
In the midst of numerous cares,
Can contrive so well to manage
All her family affairs.

From the early dawn of morning
Till the hour of evening rest,
Who can tell the thoughts and counsels
That are busy in her breast?

What apparel must be furnished,
And what stitches must be set;
What an endless round of duties
By her labor must be met.

Then the queer and curious questions
Which her little children ask;
She will answer with affection,
Though 'tis not an easy task.

She will list their sad complaints
When affliction gives them pain,
She will kiss the wounded finger,
So to make it well again.

If her little baby's crowing,
Is sweet music in her ears,
And her tide of love flows deepest
For the child of fewest years.

Who will blame the tender mother
For an instinct of her heart,
If against his roughish elders,
She shall take the baby's part?

Yet she wins the children's reverence,
While their hearts are very young,
By her gentleness of manner,
And the kindness of her tongue.

Yet I marvel, yes I marvel,
How a mother's spirit bears
All the burdens of the household,
And its never-ending cares.

And I how to that deep wisdom,
Which, when first our race began,
From a crooked rod of Adam
Made a "help" so "meet" for man.

Anecdotes.

A fellow in Virginia, whose wife left his "bed and board," advertised her, but not in the usual way. His advertisement run thus:
Jane, your absence will ruin all. Think of the children, your husband, your parents.— Return, return: all may be well. At any rate, enclose the key of the cupboard, where the whiskey is.

Among the excuses offered for military exemptions, some are extremely ludicrous.
One man in enrolling himself, wrote opposite his name: "One leg too short."

The next man that came in, noticing the excuse, and deeming it pretty good, thought he would make his better, and wrote opposite his name: "Both legs too short!"

Two friends meeting, one remarked:
"I have just met a man who told me I looked exactly like you!"
"Tell me who it was, that I may knock him down, replied his friend."

Don't trouble yourself, said he, I did that myself, at once.

An old bachelor being told that a young man of his acquaintance had just got married,
replied:
"Alas! said he, what a pity it is that one should come to misfortune so young?"

The Family Meeting.

We are all here!

Father, mother,

Sister, brother,

All who hold each other dear,

Each chair is filled—we're all at home;

To-night let no cold stranger come;

It is not often thus around

Our old familiar hearth we're found;

Bless, then, the meeting and the spot!

For once be every care forgot;

Let gentle Peace assert her Power,

And kind affection rule the hour;

We are all—here!

We're not all here!

Some are away—the dead one dear,

Who thronged with us this ancient hearth,

And gave the hour to guileless mirth,

Fate, with a stern, relentless hand,

Looked in and thinned our little band;

Some like a night-fall passed away,

And some sank, lingering day by day;

The quiet graveyard—some lie there—

And cruel ocean has its share—

We're not all here.

We are all here!

Father, mother,

Sister, brother,

You that I love will live so dear,

That may not long of us be said;

Soon must we join the gathered dead;

And by the hearth we now sit round,

Some other circle will be found.

O! then that wisdom may we know,

Which yields a life of peace below!

So, in the world to follow this,

May each repeat, in words of bliss,

We are all—here!

We are all here!

Father, mother,

Sister, brother,

You that I love will live so dear,

That may not long of us be said;

Soon must we join the gathered dead;

And by the hearth we now sit round,

Some other circle will be found.

O! then that wisdom may we know,

Which yields a life of peace below!

So, in the world to follow this,

May each repeat, in words of bliss,

We are all—here!

We are all here!

Father, mother,

Sister, brother,

You that I love will live so dear,

That may not long of us be said;

Soon must we join the gathered dead;

And by the hearth we now sit round,

Some other circle will be found.

O! then that wisdom may we know,

Which yields a life of peace below!

So, in the world to follow this,

May each repeat, in words of bliss,

We are all—here!

We are all here!

That may not long of us be said;

Soon must we join the gathered dead;

And by the hearth we now sit round,

Some other circle will be found.

Which yields a life of peace below!

Miscellaneous.

Mr. Peter's First Wife.

Dear! dear! no toast—eggs boiled as hard as bricks, and the coffee stone cold, and Mr. Peters rose from the table in a temper by no means amiable, and rang the bell violently. There was no answer! He rang again, a third, a fourth time, still no answer. Out of all patience, he went to the door and called—Maria! Maria!

A slight, pretty woman, dressed in a soiled, tumbled wrapper, with hair in a state of direful confusion, answered this summons. She had one of those round, bright faces, which Nature intended should be decked with continual smiles, but now with all its roses in bloom, it was drawn out its full length, and the large blue eyes had a serious, or rather doleful expression, totally at variance with their joyous look. Her voice, too, had lost its melodious, ringing sound, and was subdued to a dismal whine.

What is it, Joseph?

Where's Bridget?

Gone out for me. I want more white ribbon for my ascension robes.

Mr. Peters said a very naughty word, and then continued, cold coffee, hard eggs, breakfast not fit to eat.

I wish, whined his wife, you would think less of temporal matters, and turn your attention to the great end of life.

Hang it all, madam, I would like to enjoy my life while I do have it. Here was I, the happiest man in the United States—with a pleasant home, a chatty, cheerful, loving wife, and good, quiet children; and now, since you have joined the Millerites, what am I?

Oh, Joseph, if you would only come into that blessed circle.

Oh, Maria, if you would only come out of it. Where are the boys?

I am sure I don't know.

Are they going to school to-day?

My dear, their teacher has given up the school, and is turning her mind to more exalted objects. Oh! Joseph, turn now while there is time. You have still a week for preparation and repentance.

Repentance! Well, when I take up the subject, it will take rather more than a week to put it through.

And Mr. Peters put on his coat and took up his hat.

Joseph, said his wife, you need not send home any dinner. I shall be out, and I'll take the boys over to their uncle's to dine.

Joe made no answer, unless the violent, emphatic manner in which he closed the door, was one. Muttering with anger, he strode into a restaurant, to make a breakfast. Here he was hailed by one of his bachelor friends, Fred, Somers, who looked up as he heard Joe's order.

Hallo! he cried. You here? Why, what are you doing here at breakfast-time? Wife sick?

No!

Had a quarrel?

No!

Gone out of town?

No!

Then why don't you breakfast at home?

Chimney on fire?

No!

Servants all dead?

No!

Children sick?

No!

Well, what in thunder is to pay?

Maria's joined the Millerites!

Fred, gave a long whistle, and then said: Going to ascend next week?

Yes, and if I don't commit suicide in the mean time, you may congratulate me. I am almost distracted. Can't get a decent meal, children running riot, servants saucy, house all in confusion, wife in the blues, either quoting the speeches of the elders at me, or sewing on a white robe, and groaning every third stitch. Hang it all Fred, I've a great mind to take poison, or join the army.

H'm! h'm! you give an enchanting picture, but I think I can suggest a cure.

A cure?

Yes, if you will promise to follow my advice, I will make your home pleasant, your wife cheerful, and your children happy.

Do it! cried Joe. I will follow your word like a soldier under his officer. What shall I do?

At tea time, Mr. Peters entered his home whistling. Maria was seated at the table, sewing on her white robe, and there were no signs of preparation for the evening meal.

Maria, my dear, said Mr. Peters, cheerfully, is tea ready?

I don't know, was the answer, have been out all day, attending meeting.

Oh, very well, never mind. Attending meeting? You are resolved, then, to leave me this week.

Oh! Joe, I must go when I am called.

Yes, my dear, of course. Well, I must resign myself, I suppose. By the way, my dear, has it ever occurred to you that I shall be left a widower with three small children? I think I am a handsome man yet, my love, and Joe walked over to the glass, passed his fingers through his hair and pulled up his collar. Maria looked up, rather surprised.

You see, my dear, it is rather a relief for you to go quietly, you know. It is so wearing on the nerves to have a long illness; and, besides, my dear, there will be no funeral expenses, and that is quite a saving.

Mrs. Peters' lips quivered, and her large blue eyes filled with tears. Joe longed to stop his heartless speech and comfort her, but he was fearful the desired effect was not gained yet.

So, my dear, he continued, if you must go, I have been thinking of getting another wife.

What? cried Mrs. Peters.

Another wife, my love. The house must be kept in order, and the boys cared for. The grief was gone from Maria's face, but her teeth were set with a look of fierce wrath.

Another wife, Joe! Another wife!

Yes, I think I have selected a good successor. I deliberated a long time when I was a bachelor, between her and yourself. You will like her, for she is your bosom friend.

My bosom friend!

Yes, my dear, I think on the day that you ascend, I will marry Sarah Ingraham.

What! that good-for-nothing, silly, empty-headed old maid the mother of my children! What!

Well, my dear, it seems to be the best I can do! I don't want to leave my business to go a courting, and she will have me, I know.

No doubt! Oh! you great brutal, hateful!

Stop my dear, don't fly into a fury. We will try to spend our last week in happiness. Oh, by the way, I have a proposition to make.

Go on, sir! I don't spare me.

Ah, yes, this is the very thing I wish to do. I know your mind is engrossed with your ascension, room, had no reason to doubt how faithfully they performed their work, for they had labored for several hours in whitewashing the black-board.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Dec. 13th, 1862.

"Born to no Master, of no Sect are we."

THE TIMES ARE SADLY OUT OF JOINT. And the turn in our affairs requires us to be candid and explicit. Since we resumed the duties of publisher, the responsibilities have been greatly augmented. The expenses have increased almost beyond our control. The paper on which the Patriot is now printed, costs nearly double what it did twelve months since; and all other things have risen in like proportion; it may thus be seen with what we have to contend, and the necessity of promptness on the part of those who have dealings with us, and who desire to see the paper live and flourish. We feel grateful for the ready support we have received from a host of friends, who so cheerfully responded to our requisitions. But we have delinquents—quite a number we are sorry to say, who have not been thus thoughtful; they do not deal with us fairly—but hang like a millstone on our enterprise; we have called on some of them repeatedly—but at each visit they manifested such a cold indifference to our necessities, that they discouraged us and have worn out our patience. We shall give them a few days more grace, however; but if, by the first of January, they do not redeem their promises, we shall then blot their names from our books and from our remembrance, forever.

GENTLY NEIGHBOR. The editor of the Randolph Transcript, in a late article on newspaper changes, condescends to pay us a passing notice. He discourses in this wise: "The Quincy Patriot, rather more than any other paper we know, exists in a sufficient number of advertising patrons."

A part of this we endorse, the rest we shall table. It is true, we have been singularly favored in this way, and have taken the opportunity occasionally to express our gratitude to our patrons. This is a standing rule with us. For we look upon that man as a churl—a perfect bore in his nature, who, on the receipt of a nice, fat, paying advertisement, cannot find it in his heart to say, I thank you. As to exulting over our good fortune, in a spirit of egotism—this is gratuitous on the part of the Randolph editor—we never do such things; he probably was thinking how he might act provided he was in our place. Neither do we recollect ever saying that we had a "sufficient number of advertising patrons;" we have not a "sufficient number," but have room for more; if our neighbor, therefore, has any to spare, he may send them this way, and they shall receive the benefit of our columns. The Transcript it is evident, was disposed to be ironical, and the editor, no doubt, wrote the article in question, under a fit of the blues. Poor human nature. He has our best wishes, and shall continue to receive our esteem, if he will show a little more amiability when he has occasion to speak of us again.

COLD WEATHER. The weather the present week has been unusually cold. Ice has made to the thickness of half a foot or more—and our rivers look as if they were closed for the season. The light snow which we had made fine sleighing, but a new supply is now needed. Our highways are becoming very slippery, and pedestrians must use caution. We have heard of no accident; but alas for poor Fred's watch; it had but a vegetable existence—the late cold weather used it up. We have no regulator now but the Town Clock.

DESERTER SHOT. The Worcester Spy says that while the company of deserters from Fort Independence were passing through that city on Thursday, two or more of them deserted again, jumping from the cars, and one of them, named Michael Farrell, aged 22, was fired at by one of the guard, shot through the body and fell upon the track. He enlisted on the 12th day of July last in the 9th Massachusetts Regiment, and had been at Fort Independence eleven weeks for desertion from camp. He formerly lived in this town, and was brought here on Monday last and buried.

AMERICAN SILVER IN CANADA.—It is reported that American silver coin is very plentiful in Canada; but it is hinted that the samples in general currency are not such as have been made at the United States mints. Counterfeiters are reported to have done a heavy business among our Canadian neighbors.

FOOD FOR ENGLAND. Three or four vessels are to be sent from New York loaded with provisions for the starving work-people of England. It is hoped that they will not fall a prey to the pirate Alabama, which has been suffered to come out of England to destroy our commerce.

THE ANKLET. We would call attention to the advertisement of this new article, by Mr. Cummings, in to-day's issue. It is especially adapted for ladies and misses, and cannot fail to give satisfaction.

On the Death of Sergeant Carver.

We have nothing else to ask, but that which you deny already; yet will ask, That if we fail in our request, the blame May hang upon your hardness.—Shakespeare.

Charles W. Carver, a worthy and respectable citizen, left his family and a lucrative employment, more than a year ago, to go forth voluntarily with many others to battle for the right. He desired no name, no fame, no bounty, but as a private, entered the ranks to endure privations and hardships.

A few months ago he became exhausted and sick, and was at home on a furlough, until he could recover. He spoke of the unkind treatment toward the sick which many received, yet was willing and anxious to return to his company, which he did as soon as his health would permit. He had been there but a short time, when his nobleness of soul placed him at the head of his company, to spur them on to battle, while the officers of rank were absent from their wounds. He fought bravely, bled, suffered much and long, and died that the flag of our Union might still wave over a free people, (most worthy of high praise.)

His remains were brought home to be entombed in the cemetery of his own town. He had many private friends and many more public ones—who respected him for his patriotism, his bravery, and his honor as a citizen and soldier. The largest and most convenient building in town, the Unitarian meeting-house, was sought, that all who felt disposed to pay their last tribute of respect and gratitude to the departed, might assemble conveniently and listen to a few words of comfort and consolation, from one whom his nearest relatives would prefer in their hour of sorrow and distress. It was not granted, and why? Because the hero and his friends did not entertain the same views of immortality that pleased a certain few of that holy sanctuary. How long those old stone walls would stand, were there no braver, more patriotic men in the nation to defend the government, which grants the privilege of individual worship, than those who have refused their house a second time, for the funeral ceremonies of a soldier, we do not know, but we have the right as free thinkers to believe, that the whole North, with all its towers pointing heavenward, would soon fall and crumble into dust, and all the rebels of Rebellion would march triumphantly through the streets and villages with destruction and desolation in their path. Without our free government, and such men as a Carver, or a Souther, to defend it, where would our Churches and some of their worshippers be? Quietly reposing in the arms of oblivion. n.

For the Patriot. More Light Wanted.

QUINCY, DEC. 8th, 1862.
To the Publisher of the Patriot.—
In your paper of the 6th inst., I noticed a description of the funeral of Charles W. Carver, and comments upon the remarks made through my humble instrumentality on that occasion. You say:

"Mrs. Townsend, the Minister, offered some excellent remarks, and others that were not so good, but unpropitious and entirely out of place on such an occasion, in our opinion, but still may be all right in the minds of many."

You will do me a great favor by repeating the remarks you considered so inappropriate, as quite a number of persons have asked me what they were, and I am unable to inform them. I am sorry that the intelligences were so inconsiderate as to make remarks not suitable on an occasion like that, when so many mourners needed consolation. Please favor me and the friends with a publication of the remarks referred to in your article.

I like your motto, "Born to no Master or no Sect are we," very much, and hope it is a practical thing.

Yours, for the progress of eternal Truth,
M. S. TOWNSEND.

We would say, in explanation, that we think it a lack of good judgment, as well as courtesy, in any person when called upon to officiate at a public funeral of one of our beloved soldiers, where there is assembled persons of all parties and creeds, to devote one-half of the short hour allowed to the exercises, in trying to convince the audience that their political and religious views are wrong; or in hurling fiery darts of discord against the friends and relatives of the dead. Double the time allotted, might have been devoted, and profitably too, in relating the sterling integrity, manly devotion, and heroic deeds, of our gallant Sergeant, who had fought, bled and died for his Country.

LAST WEEK OF BOOTH'S ENGAGEMENT. Those who recollect the father should not fail to see the son. It will revive the memory of other times, when the stage was supported by the brilliant intellects of a Booth, a Kimball, a Cooper and a Keen. Edwin Booth is a true scion of the old stock, and bids fair to inherit his sire's fame. With such a combination of rare talent—a star company of unrivaled powers, and a star of the first magnitude—the attractions are irresistible, and must fill the house from gallery to pit. Our communication with the city is now so direct, all may enjoy the treat without much inconvenience. Their card appears in our paper to-day.

OUR LARGEST CITIES. The eighth census shows that only nine cities of the United States had a population of over 100,000 in 1860. They are: New York, 805,651; Philadelphia, 562,529; Brooklyn, 256,661; Baltimore, 212,418; Boston, 177,812; New Orleans, 168,975; Cincinnati, 161,044; St. Louis, 160,773; Chicago, 109,360.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, December 11, 1862.

Notwithstanding the early onset of winter, business is good in Boston, and many are making their piles growing out of the war. On every fair week-day, the city is full of visitors, buying goods of course; and in the evening the places of public amusement are better patronized than any preceding season for ten years past. Labor continues in high demand, and there is no fear with the industrial classes, that this will be a winter of suffering for want of employment. Among the locals, is the unexpected defeat of Mr. Wightman, and the choice of his competitor, Hon. Frederick W. Lincoln, Jr., for Mayor of the great and populous city of Boston, for 1863. The Republicans do not call it a political triumph. Apart from politics, there are evidently other causes that have rendered Mayor Wightman very unpopular at the present time. The quarantine operation may be expected among many of the officials soon after the advent of the new city government. The New York political motto, long since adopted in Massachusetts, is still in force—"To the victors belong the spoils." It bids fair to continue in practice.

Turning our eyes from local incidents to the seat of war, so far the designs of our Government for the winter campaign are seen but through a camera obscura, and the people North and South seem to be unaware of the nature of the movements now preparing. We have as yet no advice regarding any attack upon the southern side of Richmond, or the destination of Gen. Banks' army. All may be considered quiet with General Burnside for a short season. The Western news is somewhat exciting. A great battle was fought at Crawford's Prairie, Arkansas, on the 7th instant, (a Sunday of course,) which resulted after the battle had raged from ten o'clock, a. m., until dark, in a decisive Union victory. Federal loss under General Herron, six hundred; Rebel loss, fifteen hundred in killed and wounded. The enemy were twenty-four thousand strong; all under General Hindman, and embraced the flower of the Rebel trans-Mississippi army, well supplied, with eighteen pieces of artillery. As an offset to this good news, we learn that on the same day, (Sunday) the 7th, a Brigade of our troops under Colonel Moore was captured after an hour's fighting, by the guerrillas, under John Morgan, at Hartsville, Tennessee. We fear it will turn out a disgraceful affair.

Congress has under consideration a new scheme for financial legislation, whose suggestions are said to come from a New England man. If adopted, there will be but two forms of Government indebtedness; long six per cent. bonds of a uniform term, and legal tender demand notes. Perley gives the clearest view I have seen of the new scheme in his interesting letter to the Evening Journal, as follows:

"The law authorizing loans on pledges of notes to be repaid. The law authorizing the issue of certificates of indebtedness to be repaid. Both the before-mentioned loans and certificates to be paid at once by an issue of demand notes. The law which requires interest on bonds to be paid in specie to be repaid so far as future issues are concerned. All the 'five-twenties' issued to be converted at once into 'long sixes.' Require one-fourth of custom duties to be paid in specie, and receive legal tender notes for the remaining three-fourths. Authorize the funding of demand notes or any other form of indebtedness into 'long sixes' at option of holders. Allow banks to have a circulation equal to one-third of their capital stock paid in, with a heavy stamp tax on all circulation beyond that amount. Limit amount of demand notes to five hundred millions of dollars, and in case sufficient money is not realized to meet the current wants of the government and of the country, authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell to the highest bidder, after having invited proposals, a sufficient amount of 'long sixes' to supply the needs of the Government." x

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK. Never came to us in a more attractive form, or with higher recommendations to that class of readers for whom it is intended. We are confident if they appreciated it as highly as we do, no lady would long be without it. It should have the first place, in every domestic circle. Now is the time to form clubs and send in your names; the first number of the new volume has made its appearance—and a most gorgeous one it is; a sample of what is to follow. We thought we could in no way serve the interests of our readers better, than to insert the advertisement of the publisher entire; it will be found in another column of our paper to-day.

A CLEVERMAN BURIED WITHOUT COFFIN OR SHROUD. The Rev. Abraham Rice, who had been for more than twenty years connected with the Jewish Synagogue, in Lloyd street, Baltimore, died on the 29th of October, aged sixty-one years. His dying request was that he should be buried without coffin or shroud, and that his mother earth should be laid close to his body. This request was complied with.

TWO CENT STAMPS. Some people in depositing letters in the Post Office, put on two cent stamps. These are Bank Check Stamps and are worthless to put upon letters. It is a dead loss to those who put them on, and their letters must remain in the office.

For the Patriot. Thanksgiving in Camp

CAMP GROVER, ORFORD CROSS ROAD, VIRGINIA, Nov. 27, 1862.
To the Publisher of the Patriot:

Thinking a few lines from the 39th Regiment would not come amiss, I thought I would write to let you know how the Quincy Boys passed Thanksgiving. First came the roll, then breakfast—a dish of coffee and one slice of bread—then guard mounting; after that, the Boys went in for fun—some playing ball, some reading, and some writing; then came dinner—and such a dinner—a piece of meat and cold water; while all of the rest of the Boys had turkeys, chickens, puddings, pies, and fruit, sent by their respective towns, and one of the towns sent the Selectmen to see that the Boys had it—and the Quincy Boys stood with their hands in their pockets, struck with amazement; then, to break the monotony of the day was dress parade; then came supper—a dish of tea and a small piece of bread—some of them had no bread at all; the next came the roll call and officers' supper—after answering to the roll, the Boys retired to their respective tents to listen to the music and dancing of their officers, and think of the loved ones at home. Thus the Quincy Boys passed their Thanksgiving; praying that they may not pass another one like it.

From one that was there. c.

For the Patriot.
Gen. Banks' Expedition.

PROFESSOR SAXON, N. Y. HARBOR, 9 1-4 A. M., Dec. 5, 1862.

To the Publisher of the Patriot: We are "going South" as Gen. Banks says; have nearly reached the Narrows on the way out to sea. After spending three months of our time in getting ready, the 42d regiment, Mass. Vol., are now under weigh, but where we are bound is to be seen hereafter. You may hear of our having captured a drove of cattle in Texas or some other bit of news equally interesting. We are equipped with Springfield muskets, one ball and three buck shot for cartridges, with which we ought to do some execution, provided we ever get near enough to the enemy.

I have enjoyed camp life very much; have gained ten pounds, and enjoy excellent health, which you know I always do, as that is one of my articles of faith and practice. Since Thanksgiving day I have had a fine opportunity to see the sights in Gotham, being detailed to take charge of ordnance stores aboard the transports for our regiment. We expect to rendezvous at Fortress Monroe, from whence the expedition will sail for its destination. I shall then know more of the extent and power of their long talked of affair, and may be able to give some account of it; until then, adieu.

From your friend. v. j.

Summary of Intelligence.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

A monster steamer is building in New York, to run between that city and Albany, to be finished next spring. It is to be able to carry 1500 passengers, and to be called the Dictator.

The commanders of the three grand divisions of the army of the Potomac—Generals Franklin, Hooker, and Sumner—are Massachusetts men.

The present indebtedness of the rebel government is estimated to be over four hundred million.

Dr. Josiah Prescott and his partner celebrated their golden wedding at Farmington, Me., on Monday of last week. Among the presents on the occasion was a box labeled "Homeopathic Pills," which was found to be full of gold dollars. Not bad pills these to take.

Small gold coin has not been made at the mint for a long time past. The coinage now consists mainly of twenty dollar gold pieces.

A Boston paper says that during the war of 1812, gold never commanded a higher premium than 35 per cent., so that the sales of Wall street are now over the mark of the old time.

Homeopathic Physicians are excluded from service as Surgeons in the Federal army, by order of the Surgeon General.

The waters of Lake Superior are so clear that a piece of white canvas, sunk for the purpose, on a clear day last summer, could be distinctly seen at a depth of seventy-five feet!

The other day a New York house sold to another firm, $500,000 worth of tea. This is said to be the largest transaction of the kind on record in New York.

It is a fact little known, that for the first five years of our Government, the United States Senate always sat in secret. The first time the doors were thrown open for public discussion was on the contest as to the right of Albert Gallatin to a seat in the Senate.

It is stated that the builder of the pirate "Alabama" is a member of the British Parliament. This is neutrality with a vengeance!

Stewart, the dry goods prince of New York, has made shopping easy in his new store. By an engine of 14 horse power he hoists a lady from one floor to another, or through the whole series of floors, with perfect safety. The journey is made in a snug little chamber with windows.

LECTURE. We would call the attention of the reader to a lecture which will be given at the Town Hall, on Monday evening next, by Lieutenant Caffell, of the United States army. He was taken prisoner at the first battle of Bull Run, and lingered out a confinement of thirteen months. The Lieutenant has seen much and endured much, and will give a thrilling description of events connected with that memorable battle field, and the hardships and trials which he passed through during his captivity. Lieutenant Caffell's name stands high on the roll of fame. He is represented as being a brave officer; always found in the thickest of the fight, leading his men on to deeds of noble daring.

His card may be found in another column of our paper to-day.

CHOWDER. A chowder will be served up at the Hancock Saloon this evening.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.
Who are the Abolitionists?

BY F. M. ADLINGTON—WEYMOUTH.

Who are these abolitionists,
By some so deadly hated?
Who boldly enter in the lists
With foes however rated.

Who more than thirty years have stood
And brav'd the brunt of battles;
And risk'd their fortunes, name and blood,
To free the human chattels.

A braver or more daring band,
Ne'er fac'd the cannon's thunder;
Outnumber'd far their firmly stand,
No power their ranks can sunder.

One banner wav'd where they have trod,
A holy sign to lead them;
The banner of the living God,
Upheld by Truth and Freedom.

And can their foes expect success,
With traitors forces blended;
Or hope that banner to oppress,
By Heaven and Truth defended.

Vain is the effort of the foe
To stay their noble daring;
Determined still in weal or woe,
All risk and danger sharing.

Their trust is in the Mighty One,
Whose banner—Victory's token—Glows with the mandate of his Son—
Let every yoke be broken.

And shall the cause of human rights,
By Christian men, be slighted;
Shall he who for our Freedom fights
With slavery be requited.

No? on you Abolitionists,
You bear Jehovah's token;
True as a Righteous Judge exists,
Shall every yoke be broken.

All impotent the power to stay,
Our armies heaven appointed;
And woe to them the reckoning day,
Who brave the Lord's anointed.

The Guide Post.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN OF JOHN PETER HEBBEL.

D'y'e know the road to the har'd o' floor?
At break o' day let them the bars
And plough y'r wheat field hour by hour.
Till sundown—yes, till shade o' stars.

You peg away, the livelong day,
Nor loaf about, nor gaze around;
And that's the road to the thrashin'-floor,
And into the kitchen, I'll be bound.

D'y'e know the road where the dollars lay?
Follow the red cents, here and there;
For if a man leaves them, I can guess,
He won't find dollars anywhere.

D'y'e know the road to Sunday's rest?
Just don't o' work days be afraid;
A rest, and late o' garden-stuff,
And, like as not, a jug o' beer!

D'y'e know the road to poverty?
Turn in at any tavern sign;
Turn in—it's tempting as can be,
There's a bran new cards and liquor fine.

In the last tavern there's a sack,
And when the cash your pockets quins,
Just hang the wallet on your back,
You vagabond! see how it fits!

D'y'e know what road to loan leads,
And good old age?—a lovely sight!
By way o' temp'rance, honest deeds,
And tryin' to do y'r duty right.

And when the roads forks any side,
And you're in doubt which one it is,
Stand still, and let your conscience guide:
"Thank God, it can't lead much amiss!"

And now the road to church-yard gate
You needn't ask! go anywhere;
For, whether roundabout or straight,
All roads lead to that "il bring you there."

Go, fearin' God, but lovin' more!
I've tried to be an honest guide,
You find the grave has got a door,
And something for you t'other side.

Anecdotes.

A gentleman observed an urchin who had a large slice of bread in his hand, and who was crying very bitterly.

My son, he exclaimed, what are you crying about?
Mother won't—boo-hoo oo—put any butter
on my bread—boo-hoo oo!

Oh, is that all? Come dry up your tears and be a man.

It ain't so much the butter, was the retort;
it's the disposition of the old woman!

A gentleman one day got so much enraged
with his servant, that he knocked him down.
As Pat lay on the floor apparently senseless,
the gentleman went up to him, and, repent-
ing his rashness, said:

Are you dead or alive, Pat?
Sure, an' that's what I was trying to make out myself; but if it's dead I am, I hope I'll live to see yer honor swing for it, for 'twas an ugly rap ye gave me.

A gentleman in London advertising for a horse, added this postscript to his advertisement:

It would be needless for a Yorkshire horsejockey to apply, as the advertiser is from Yorkshire!

Mary, are you going to the new place?
Sure no, ma'am; the lady couldn't give a satisfactory reference from her last cook.

The Dying Soldier.

A TRUE STORY.

The chaplain came at last to a cot set somewhat by itself outside the wards. Here, reclining at length, was a young man, whose face bore but slight traces of suffering. It was flushed with a hue like that of health; the eyes were undimmed, and only the position of his hands, which were thrown over his head, and locked in almost spasmodic tightness, told that he was in pain. He was unusually noble in countenance. His brow was broad and fair, and the thick locks that clustered back from the temples curled like the ringlets of a boy. He knew not why, but the chaplain experienced an unusual and sudden sympathy for this young man, struck down in his beauty; still he felt there was no immediate danger in his case.

How is he wounded? he asked of the surgeon, as the two approached the bed softly. In the right side below the ribs, was the reply.

Is he in danger?
Oh! no; that is, not at present. The case may take a bad turn, to be sure; but it looks very well now. Charles, he added, addressing the sick man, familiarly, the chaplain is going the rounds; would you like to see him?
Oh! certainly; exclaimed the young man, smiling. I am very glad to see him. And he held out his hand. His voice was strong and ringing, as with the highest health; his clasp was vigorous.

I am sorry to find you wounded, my friend, said the chaplain.
Oh! only the casualty of war; we must do as we expect it, you know.

Do you suffer much?
At times sir, very severely; I feel so well, only the distress here. And he pressed his hand to his side.

You will be up soon, I hope.
I trust so, sir; the doctors say it is a bad wound, but will yield with care. I only wish I had my mother here. She has heard of it, and doubtless, started before this. It will seem so comfortable to see her; you don't know how I long for her.

Ah! mothers, you are first thought of when the hardy soldier feels the pang of pain. It is your name he calls; your form he sees through the mists of delirium; your voice he hears in every gentle word that is spoken. He knows whose touch will be tenderest, through the sympathy of suffering; he knows who has borne the most for him; and on the tented field, the holy name of mother receives a fresh baptism of love and beauty.
I can imagine how you feel, said the chaplain; and I have no doubt you will see her soon. Meanwhile, you know, there is a friend who will be to you more than mother or father, sister or brother.

I realize that, sir, said the young man. I am a professor of religion, and have been for years. When I was shot—aye, and before, I commended my soul to Him for life or death. But I confess I have much to live for. I am not brought yet where I am perfectly willing to die.
It may be for the reason that you are not yet called to die, replied the chaplain; but in life, you know, it is one important thing to be prepared for death.

After a short prayer, the minister and the sick man parted. He seems very strong and sanguine, he said, as he met the surgeon again, and likely to recover.
No doubt of it, sir; no doubt, was the hasty reply of the surgeon, as he passed on.

The hour of midnight had struck from the great hall. Slowly and solemnly it knelled the departing moments, and its echo rolled through the halls, vibrating on many an ear that would never hear the sound of the striking hour again. The chaplain still sat up in his room writing letters for three or four of the wounded soldiers, and a strange stillness fell around him as he closed the last sheet, and sat back with folded hands to think. He could not tell why, but do what and go where he would, the face of the young volunteer with whom he had spoken last, haunted him. He arose to move to the window, where the breeze was cooler, when a knock was heard at the door, and a rapid voice called—Chaplain! He hurried to lift the latch. The surgeon stood there, looking like a shadow in the dim moonlight that crept into the passage.

Chaplain, sorry to disturb you, and more sorry still to give you an unpleasant duty to perform.

Why, what is? was the quick rejoinder.

The fine young fellow whom you talked with is going.
What! you do not mean—
Won't live an hour, or two at the most. I tried to tell him, but I couldn't; and finally I thought of you. You can ease it, you know.

A great shadow fell on the chaplain; for a moment he was stunned and choked, and his voice grew husky as he made reply.

It is a sad errand, but none the less my duty. Poor fellow! I can't realize it; indeed, I cannot. His voice was so strong; his manner so natural. I'll be there presently. And left alone, he threw himself upon his knees to wrestle for strength in prayer.

The atmosphere was filled with low sighs from the strugglers with pain and disease. Going softly up to the couch at which he had stood before, the chaplain gazed upon the face before him. It looked as calm as that of a sleeping infant, but he did not sleep. Hearing a slight noise, his eyes flew open, and rested in some surprise upon the chaplain.

I felt as if I must see you again before I retired, said the latter, striving to steady his voice. How do you feel now?

Oh! better, I thank you; in fact, almost well. The pain is gone, and I feel quite hopeful. I rather think the surgeon does, though he said nothing.

Again that fearful swelling in the chaplain's throat. How should he tell him of his danger—how prepare the mind so calmly resting on almost a certainty—the poor, hopeful soul that would never look with earthly eyes on the mother he so longed for? Another moment, and the young man appeared to be struck with some peculiarity in the face and movements of the chaplain. The large eyes sought his with an intenseness that was pain, and he strove to interpret that which made the difference between this and his former demeanor.

Your cares weary you, chaplain, he said quietly; you must be very faithful, for it is past midnight.

I was on the point of going to bed, when I was called to prepare a dying man for his last hour, was the tearful response.
Indeed! what poor fellow goes next? rejoined the young man, with a look of mournful enquiry.

There was no answer; for the wealth of words the chaplain could not have spoken now. That long so unconscious of danger; that eye so full of sympathy! Still a strange silence! What did it mean? The sick man's enquiring glance changed for a moment to one of intense terror. He raised both arms—let them fall heavily on the coverlet at his side, and in a voice totally altered by emotion, he gasped:
Great heaven! you mean me.

My dear friend! said the chaplain, unmoved.
I am to die, then—and—how—long? his eye once more sought that of his chaplain.

You have made your peace with God, let death come as soon as it will. He will carry you over the river.

Yes; but this is awfully sudden! his lips quivered; he looked up grievously—and I shall not see my mother.

Christ is better than a mother, murmured the chaplain.

Yes. The word came in a whisper. His eyes were closed; the lips still wore that trembling grief, as if the chastisement were too sore, too hard to be borne, but as the minutes passed, and the soul lifted itself up stronger and more steadily upon the wings of prayer, the countenance grew calmer, the lip steadier, and when the eyes were opened again, there was a light in their depths that could have come only from heaven.

I thank you for your courage, he said, more feebly, taking the hand of the chaplain. The bitterness is now over and I feel willing to die. Tell my mother—he paused, gave one sob, dry, and full of the last anguish of earth—tell her how I longed to see her, but if God will permit me, I will be near her. Tell her to comfort all who loved me, to say that I thought of them all. Tell my father that I am glad that he gave his consent, and that other fathers will mourn for other sons. Tell my minister, by word or letter, that I thought of him, and that I thank him for all his counsels. Tell him I find that Christ will not desert the passing soul; and that I wish him to give my testimony to the living; that nothing is of real worth but the religion of Jesus. And now will you pray for me?

Oh! what emotions swelled the heart of that devoted man, as he knelt by the bedside of the dying volunteer, the young soldier of Christ, and with tones so low that only the ear of God, and that of him who was passing away could hear, besought God's grace and presence! Never in all his experience had his heart been so powerfully wrought upon; never had a feeling of such unutterable tenderness taken possession of his soul. He seemed already in the presence of a glorified spirit; and after the prayer was over, restraining his sobs, he bent down, and pressed upon the beautiful brow, already chilled with the breath of the coming angel, twice, thrice, a fervent kiss. They might have been as tokens from the father and mother, as well as himself. So perhaps thought the dying soldier, for a heavenly smile touched his face with new beauty, as he said, thank you! I won't trouble you any longer; you are wearied out—go to your rest. The Lord God be with you! was the fervent response.

Amen! trembled from the fast whitening lips. Another hour passed. The chaplain still moved uneasily around his room. There were hurried sounds overhead, and footsteps on the stairs. He opened his door; encountered the surgeon, who whispered one little word—Gone!

Christ's soldier had found the captain of his salvation.

Corn Elevator.

Now for Buffalo and the Elevator. Corn comes into Buffalo, not only from Chicago, but from all the ports round the lakes; Racine, Milwaukee, Grand Haven, Port Jarnia, Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, and many others. At these ports the produce is generally bought and sold; but at Buffalo, it is merely passed through a gateway. It is taken from vessels of a size fitted for the lakes, and placed in other vessels fitted for the canal. This is the Erie Canal, which connects the lakes with the Hudson River and with the city of New York.

An Elevator is as ugly a monster as has been yet produced. In uncouthness of form it outdoes those obsolete old brutes, who used to roam about the semi-aqueous world, and live a most uncomfortable life with their great hanging stomachs and huge unsatisfied maws. The Elevator itself consists of a big, moveable trunk—moveable like that of an elephant, but not pliable, and less graceful even than an elephant's. This is attached to a huge granary or barn; but in order to give altitude within the barn for the necessary moving up and down of this trunk—seeing that it cannot be curled gracefully to its purposes as an elephant's is curled—there is an awkward box erected on the roof of the barn, giving some twenty feet of additional height, up into which the Elevator can be thrust. It will be understood, then, that this big, moveable trunk—the head of which, when it is at rest, is thrust up into the box on the roof—is made to slant down in an oblique direction from the building to the river; for the Elevator is an amphibious institution, and flourishes only on the banks of navigable waters. When its head is ensconced within its box, and the beast of prey is thus nearly hidden within the building, the unsuspecting vessel is brought up within reach of the creature's trunk, and down it comes, like a musquito's proboscis, right through the deck, in at the open aperture of the hole, and so into the very vitals and bowels of the ship. When there, it goes to work upon its food with a greed and an avidity, that is disgusting to a beholder of any taste or imagination. And now I must explain the anatomical arrangements by which the Elevator still devours and continues to devour, till the corn within its reach has all been swallowed, masticated and digested. Its long trunk, as seen slanting down from out of the building, across the wharf and into the ship, is a mere wooden pipe; but this pipe is divided within. It has two departments—and as the grain-bearing troughs pass up the one on a piable band, they pass empty down the other. The system, therefore, is that of an ordinary drudging machine; only that corn and not mud is taken away—and that the buckets or troughs are hidden from sight. Below, within the stomach of the poor bark, three or four laborers are at work, helping to feed the Elevator. They shovel the corn up toward its maw, so that at every swallow he may take in all he can hold. Thus, the troughs, as they ascend, are kept full, and when they reach the upper part of the building, they empty themselves into a shoot, over which a porter stands guard, moderating the shoot by a door; which the weight of his finger can open and close. Through this doorway the corn runs into a measure, and is weighed. By measures of forty bushels each, the tally is kept. There stands the apparatus, with the figures plainly marked, over against the porter's eye; and as the sum amounts nearly up to forty bushels, he closes the door till the grains run thinly through, hardly a handful at a time, so that the balance is exactly struck. Then the teller standing by, marks down his figures, and the record is made. The exact porter touches the string of another door, and the forty bushels of corn runs out at the bottom of the measure, disappears down another shoot, standing also toward the water, and deposits itself in the canal boat. The transit of the forty bushels of corn from the larger vessel to the smaller, will have taken less than a minute, and the cost of that transit will have been half a cent.

ANTONY TROLLOPE.

Snapping Up.

Mad dogs and turtles are not the only snapping animals in the world. It is to be feared that most families are afflicted with one or more "snappers," who are wont to exercise their spiteful propensities, especially at the table or around the family fireside. Addressing herself to her mother, Mary, with her eyes full of twinkling and fun, says, I took a walk at ten o'clock this morning, and—

Here John broke in.
Now John was just at that age when a youth knows every thing under the sun, and more too; he never makes a mistake; is always positive that every thing he does, says, or thinks, is just exactly so, and could not possibly be any other way.

Why, sister, how could you say it was ten o'clock? it was quarter past ten at least.
One sample is enough. Every one of observation can, of his own knowledge, multiply cases, indefinitely.

The unseemly habit is sometimes observed in families whose position and opportunities of association would lead to the supposition that every thing vulgar and uncourteous would be instinctively shunned. The person criticised, not having sense enough to pass over the boorishness, begins a defence; and before one is aware of it, the whole table or circle is silenced, and find themselves in the awkward position of listeners to a series of angry contradictions about a matter of no possible consequence to any one of the whole company, in one sense, but of importance in another, as there is a certain disagreeableness about it, which all feel more or less. What if a thing happened a minute or a month later or sooner? It is the general statement to which attention is directed.—Contradictions, and corrections in general company are clownish; they are clear proof that in almost every case, the person who assumes such an ungracious office is a boor of the first water, and is essentially deficient in that refinement and delicacy, which are inseparable from a cultivated mind and a taste for all that is beautiful, elegant and refined. A whole evening's enjoyment has been frequently marred, and all of the company has gone home with a kind of blight upon the sensibilities, in consequence of a jar caused by the impatient contradiction or correction of some unimportant fact in narration.

A Fatalist.

A Western paper publishes the following: We knew an old man who believed that what was to be would be. He lived in a region infested by very savage Indians. He always took his gun with him when going into the woods; but this time he found that some of the family had taken it. As he would not go without it, his friends tantalized him by saying that there was no danger of the Indians; that he would not die until his time came.

Yes, yes, said the old fellow; but suppose I was to meet an Indian, and his time had come, it wouldn't do to not to have my gun!

Right Side of Heaven.

An interesting anecdote is told of a little Swedish girl who had given evidence that a saving change had been wrought upon her. She was walking with her father, one night, under the starry sky intently meditating upon the glories of heaven. At last looking up to the sky, she said:

Father, I have been thinking if the wrong side of the heavens is so beautiful, what will the right side be.

One Drop at a Time.

Have you ever watched an icicle as it is formed? You noticed how it froze one drop at a time until it was a foot long or more. If the water was clean, the icicle remained clear, and sparkled brightly in the sun; but if the water was but slightly muddy, the icicle looked foul and its beauty was spoiled. Just so our characters are forming. One little thought or feeling, at a time, adds its influence. If each thought be pure and right, the soul will be lovely and will sparkle with happiness; but if impure and wrong, there will be final deformity and wretchedness.

No Poverty There.

Millions of good men have left the earth poor. Lazarus, the moment before he died, was a beggar at the gate but in a moment after his death, his estate had grown so fast that the haughty worldling, still surviving in all his affluence, in comparison with him, was a penniless pauper. O poor believer! rejoice in prospect of your grand inheritance. It is incorruptible, undefiled, and fadeth not away. It is really immense, inestimable, unspeakable. Has it not been your endeavor to "lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven?" Why not often think of results there? Fear not. There is good news from that far country. Unsuccessful as you may have seemed on earth, your heavenly scheme have all prospered.

Articles employed in Medicine.

An English paper thus sums up the number of animals and animal products which have been employed for medical purposes:—

"At various times in the history of the medical art, animals and animal products have been largely used as healing substances." At one time this application brought into physic what is to us, in these days, a revolting spectacle. Even at the present hour, among the illiterate, old prejudices and superstitions prevail relative to the value of certain animals as curatives of innumerable diseases, the narration of which would produce nausea in the least fastidious. Among the animals and animal products which have been employed medicinally, as enumerated by M. Moquin Tandon, may be included cork, wood lice, cochineal insect, pachyderma, sepiada, snails, oysters, coral, spermatic, sponge, bile, crabs' eyes, spiders' web, oils from the livers of the cod, the skate and the shark, musk, civet, beaver, hyracum, ambergris, cantharides, mylabris, cerocoma and meloe, leeches, galls, cases, or vesicles produced by different species of aphides, the treballs, and lastly, various parts of animals to be used as accessories to medicine, such as bones, blood, flesh, albumen, gelatine, fat, oil, milk, eggs, honey, wax, hair, and other horrid bodies.

"It would form a curious and interesting chapter to write an accurate account of the mode in which these numerous substances found their way into the laboratory of the physician; to trace why they possessed real or supposed uses, and why they have so many of them either faded into desuetude, or been replaced by something derived from them, and now considered substitutional. To assume that all these remedies were without a use, that they were mere phibor, and acted solely by the faith they excited, would, we opine, be taking too much for granted as to the curative powers of belief and implicit trust. We have, in fact, one or two broad facts which show, on the contrary, that remedies long used and derived from the animal kingdom exerted an influence for good by virtue of certain true remedial agents which they contained, hidden it is true, but on this account none the less valuable."

National Ideas of Paradise.

The Laplander believes Paradise to be situated in the centre of the snows of Sweden. The Muscovite imagines it among the islands of the vast Pacific. The Mexicans conceived that those who died of wounds or were drowned went to a cool and delightful place, there to enjoy all manner of pleasure; those who died in battle or captivity were walled to the palace of the sun, and led a life of endless delight. After an abode of four years in this splendid habitation, they animated clouds and birds of beautiful plumage and sweet song; having, at the same time, liberty to ascend to heaven or descend to earth, to suck sweet flowers and warble enchanting songs.

The Tonguese imagine the forests and mountains to be peopled with a peculiar kind of giant, who exercise an influence over the affairs of mankind, and in their ideas relative to a state of future happiness, they regarded a delightful climate, an atmosphere surcharged with odors, with a throne profusely covered with garlands of flowers, as the summit of celestial felicity. Among the Arabs, a fine country, with abundance of shade, forms the principal object of their future promised bliss.

There is a tribe of American Indians believing the souls of good men are conveyed to a pleasant valley, abounding in guaves and other delicious fruits. The heaven of the Celts was called Flathinnis. "The island of the good and brave;" their hell, Hwin, "The island of cold climate." The Druids, as we are informed by Ammonius Marcellus, believed that the souls of good men were walled in progressive course from planet to planet, enjoying, at every successive change, a more sublime felicity than in the last.

Rough Courtesy.

There are some men in this world remarkable for their rough method of addressing others, while at heart they may be as clever as anybody. There once lived in New Hampshire a man who was in the habit of treating a neighbor by the name of Mason, in this manner. On one occasion he addressed him in the harshest manner possible, using every kind of epithet, which his good-natured neighbor bore most patiently. They parted, but what was Mason's surprise the next morning to see his abusive neighbor open the door, put his head in, and break out, "Look here, old chum, I want to borrow your shovel to-day!" Of course the shovel was lent as though nothing had happened.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Dec. 20th, 1862.

"Born to no Master, of no Sect are we."

CHRISTMAS DINNER FOR OUR BRAVE SOLDIERS. On Wednesday evening, the Lyceum Room presented a gay spectacle; many of our patriotic citizens had overhauled the Hall with plenty of fine turkeys, hams, tongues, poultry, pies, puddings, preserves, tobacco, and a great many other things. Some ten large boxes and several bundles were packed for Captain Spear's Company, and our brave boys. On the 14th, our people were very busy, in getting ready these things to be sent at the earliest opportunity.

There is a project on foot here which is being carried out very successfully in many New England villages. Every fortnight or three weeks a box is made up and sent off with little comforts and delicacies for the soldiers. By having a central depot for the reception of articles, in charge of some one who has the cause at heart, there would be little difficulty, in our opinion, in doing what others have taught us it is our duty to do.

PRESENTATION TO LIEUTENANT GIBSON. Our readers remember our fellow-townsmen, young George W. Gibson, enlisted in the Spencer Company, twenty-first Massachusetts Regiment, Colonel Clarke—he went as a private; through his good behavior and gallant deeds, in many a battle field, he so won the esteem of the officers, and the Regiment, that he rose to a Corporal, Sergeant, Orderly, and now holds the enviable position of First Lieutenant in the same Company. Our citizens always prompt in rewarding the deeds of a gallant soldier—the young hero, who was wounded in one of the battles recently fought in Virginia, was obliged to seek the retirement of home, in order to recruit his health; when he was able to return, and on the eve of his departure, his friends, desirous of tendering some testimonial of their esteem, invited him to join them in a social ball, got up for the occasion, and which came off at the Town Hall one evening last week. At an early hour, Colonel Walker, of the 4th Massachusetts Regiment, came forward, and in a very appropriate speech to Lieut. Gibson, presented him, before the large company assembled, a very handsome sword, scabbard and belt; to which the Lieutenant responded in some happy remarks. The occasion was quite an interesting one. After the presentation, the company proceeded to the Hancock House, and partook of a sumptuous repast, got up in "mine host's" best style. Dancing was resumed after their return to the Hall, which was kept up until the gray dawn. The old "wigwag" never had within its sacred walls, a more brilliant and happy party.—Lieut. Gibson, we learn, has again joined his Regiment.

ANOTHER PRESENTATION TO LIEUT. GEO. W. GIBSON. Quite an interesting event took place on Wednesday evening of last week, at a hall at the Willard Hotel. Lieut. Gibson was the recipient of a beautiful silver dinner set, for an officer's camp use, a gift by Mr. Schwabe, from the Clarendon House, New York city—the same gentleman we alluded to in our last. It is of the same style as that which was presented last summer by Mr. Astor, Mr. Schwabe and other gentlemen, to the late General Kearney, and other officers, for their gallantry on the battle field. This compliment paid to one of our own sons, is an honor which any one may well be proud of; it shows in what estimation our people are held as soldiers. The generous donor was a stranger to Lieut. Gibson and the town. Three times three hearty cheers were given by the large company present.

RAILROAD RATES. The Sound lines between Boston and New York, (Fall River, Stonington and Norwich lines) have agreed that the charges for freight shall be the same by each line, viz., four cents per foot for measurement goods, and other goods as per their printed tariff.

REVENUE. The receipts for revenue stamps at the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the week ending November 21, amounted to, it is said, more than $230,000.

PERSONAL. E. Granville Pratt, Esq., Counsellor at Law, has taken the office formerly occupied by J. M. Gourgass, Esq., in Quincy. While we regret the departure from town of a valued friend and counsellor, we congratulate him on the prospect of success in his new location.—Abington Standard.

DEMAND FOR INDEMNITY. Mr. Seward has instructed Mr. Adams to demand of the British government indemnity for damage committed by the rebel privateer Alabama upon our commerce, on the ground that the injury was committed by British subjects, in violation of the law of nations, after repeated and ample notice, warning and remonstrance had been given to the British government. What the response will be, and whether Mr. Seward will follow up the demand by strong measures, are of course only matters of conjecture. Evidently there is a speck of war in the horizon, though the cloud be as yet no bigger than a man's hand.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 18, 1862.

Our beloved country, whose organic institutions are the best that the world affords, is in a sad plight—fearful uncertainty is before us as to the perpetuity of our National existence. What is the only course for us to pursue as clouds and darkness hover over our liberties? The answer is simple, to sustain with all our might the Government in crushing the rebellion. This is the duty of every loyal man. True, impartial history may show that secession is a sequence of abolitionism. Slavery is a great vice, but under our status of government it is constitutionally admitted as property—chattel worth hundreds of millions,—commanding wealth, political power and industrial materials for no small portion of the civilized world. As a palliation argument, it has been asked if the principal property of the North was seriously threatened by the South, as the principal property of the South has been by the North, would it be tolerated? We opine that domestic slavery cannot be immediately abolished. The process must be gradual emancipation. The freedom of four millions of blacks at once, would disturb the whole order of civilized society in our country. We could not live in peace with them, and bloodshed would be the constant condition of things. True, philanthropy dictates that the views of President Lincoln, as set forth in his Annual Message on gradual emancipation by compensation to any of the slave holding States, accepting such conditions, are the correct theory to accomplish the object; including his colonization scheme. Whites and blacks cannot live on the same footing together in peace. The negro by a natural law is another race; and as for amalgamation it is wicked to encourage such idea. The negro question with many is inseparably connected with the prosecution of the war. The abolition standard to precede our armies of conquest. Surely the surmounting one great evil at a time would seem the most natural hypothesis to conquer the rebellion. After this, the manumission of the slave would form the next theme in the great drama of events that must follow. With a heart full of hope that our Union will yet be restored—peace soon gladden the hearts of the people, and the slavery question settled to the South as we would wish the South would settle it with us—a golden rule morally, and politically, we leave the subject.

Evening. The city is filled with gloom from the sad tidings of the war; over twelve thousand of our brave officers and soldiers fell killed or wounded at Fredericksburg, on Saturday, and Burnside's whole army has retreated over the Rappahannock. The worst battle for our cause that has been fought since the war. The readers of the Quincy Patriot will know all before this is written. We are temporarily worsted, but not conquered; saddened to the inmost soul, but not despondent. We had hoped and expected far better tidings; but the fortunes of war are always precarious. To suppress this rebellion we are engaged in a just cause, and the right will surely prevail. The expressions of the daily press are mingled with sorrow, indignation, and severe criticism. I have space only to allude to one article from New York, as follows:

"The Times editorially, says, the public of course feel very much discouraged. The scene opened so finely on Thursday, that they expected it would continue to be illuminated with glory, until the arrival of the expected hour when our fluttering banners should be borne into Richmond with the sweep of 150,000 gallant soldiers of the Union; but, instead of this, the brightness of Thursday darkened into the carnage and gore of Saturday, and to-day we behold our great army, its banners drooping and dripping with blood, encamped on the spot from which less than a brief week ago it started out on its work of conquest. It is discouraging, and none but a fool would attempt to conceal it. What now? What next? We know not; we know nothing of Halleck's plans, or of the plans of General Burnside, or of the President. We have still, however, our army. We have still our impetuous and inexorable work. Our army, we believe, with proper leadership, is still ample for the work."

THE ADVANCE IN THE PRICE OF PETROLEUM. Refined Petroleum has gone up recently from sixty-eight cents per gallon to one dollar and ten cents. Some of the journals attribute this rise to the lessened product of the oil at the wells, and say the supply is failing. This, however, is not the true reason. The cause is scarcity, but a scarcity arising from suspension of the business of refining. In June, most of the refiners stopped work, under the fear that the Government tax would ruin the business. After three months of suspension, work was resumed by some of the refiners, but bad roads to the wells made the getting out of crude oil a slow process. Meanwhile the stock in market has been greatly reduced by consumption and foreign shipments. Many of the most extensive refiners have orders on hand for all they can make in a month, and the prospect is that high prices will rule for a few weeks to come. The foreign demand is very large, as in Europe the oil is used directly for manufacturing gas. Some of the richest and most expensive colors used for dyeing are obtained from Petroleum.—Philadelphia Ledger.

For the Patriot.

A Reply.

QUINCY, DEC. 15th, 1862.

Dear "Patriot"—I am grateful for your reply in Saturday's paper, to my enquiry in regard to remarks made at the funeral of Mr. Carver, though you give nothing definite. You say:

"We think it a lack of good judgment, as well as courtesy, in any person when called upon to officiate at a public funeral of one of our beloved soldiers, where there is assembled persons of all parties and creeds, to devote one-half of the short hour allowed to the exercises, in trying to convince the audience that their political and religious views are wrong; or in hurling fiery darts of discord amongst the friends and relatives of the dead. Double the time allotted, might have been devoted, and profitably, too, in relating the sterling integrity, manly devotions, and heroic deeds, of our gallant Sergeant, who had fought, bled and died for his Country."

I did not get the understanding from language that passed my lips on that occasion, that any effort was made to convince people of their wrong views, other than broad statements of facts in regard to political bigotry and superstition, which we all know are true. Had Mr. Carver died of consumption or any other disease, it seems to me the occasion would have required different remarks. But he was shot. What for? Because that party spirit has led men to grow mad, even to killing each other! He laid down his life in defence of what he believed right, and in which he was sustained by a majority of his townsmen.—His body was brought home to receive the tribute of respect due to his honor as a man; to his patriotism as a soldier. The use of a church, whose people profess to be liberal, was refused! Why? Because bigotry and superstition are more powerful than love of country, and the noble souls who sacrifice home, friends, and life, to continue the enjoyment of what freedom we have. I may not be capable of judging for the world whether a good judgment or courtesy would approve the direct reference to such truths, on such occasions or not, but I am not afraid to trust those dear ones who hold our spiritual well being as a sacred thing, and who use my organism to give utterance to their sentiments.

I called upon Mrs. Carver and her family to learn what meant the "fiery darts of discord hurled among friends and relatives," and was assured by all the family that they were satisfied, and had no idea to what you could refer.

If Mr. Carver was a man of sterling worth and honor, as all who knew him are willing to acknowledge, and if his deeds were heroic and gallant, any language that could have been used would have been a poor compliment to him. The evidences of his honor are written in the hearts of those with whom he dealt. His many devotions, heroic deeds and gallantry as a soldier are recorded in the annals of his country's history, and gloriously inscribed upon the grand rising columns of a nation's freedom.

Yes, my truth seeking friend! let us pray for "more light" upon these great subjects of the day, that we may better understand the causes and effects around us, and consequently each other better. I am thankful for your kind criticism, and hope you will continue it, for the "agitation of thought is the beginning of wisdom." Ever for Truth.

M. S. TOWNSEND.

By request of Mrs. Townsend, we will offer a few words in reply, although they are in part, at least, unnecessary. In the first place you forget that Mr. Carver had any friends or relatives except his own family, as you say you inquired of them, and they were satisfied. We thought he had some, nay, many. In the second place, you say: "If his deeds were heroic and gallant, any language that could have been used would have been a poor compliment to him." Is there no other reason for speaking of the noble qualities of our departed friends than complimenting them? Oh! truly, "more light" is needed. We consider this reason as insignificant as the smallest pea among ten thousand and one in a bushel.

GLEASON'S LITERARY COMPANION IN COLORS. This valuable Literary Weekly will commence a new volume January 1st, 1863, in grand style, and will be printed in eight different colors, something which has never been attempted in this or any other country, with new type and entire new dress throughout. The Companion is an elegant, moral, and refined miscellaneous Family Journal. Its columns are devoted to Political Literature, Wit and Humor, Prose and Poetic Gems. An unrivalled corps of writers and artists have been engaged for the coming year, and several new and popular features will be introduced. Each number will be beautifully illustrated. In size the Companion is some fifteen hundred square inches, forming a mammoth weekly of sixteen octavo pages, and containing nearly twice as much reading matter and of a more refined character than any other weekly paper. Terms, only $2 a year. Sample copies sent free. Published weekly by F. Gleason, corner of Tremont and Broomfield streets, Boston.

CHOWDER. A chowder will be served up at the Hancock Saloon this evening.

SENDING BOOTS BY MAIL. The Washington correspondent of the New York Post says the Post Office there is loaded down with articles sent from the North for the benefit of the soldiers. Nearly a carload of mittens, socks and boots, arrive daily at the city Post Office, directed to soldiers of Burnside's army. The postage on one pair of boots arriving a day or two ago was over five dollars. The cause of this singular use of the mails is an order from army headquarters prohibiting the sending of any such articles by express or otherwise to Aquia Creek. No sutlers' supplies have been permitted to go down the river for weeks, and such is the need of a few articles that the friends of the soldiers at home are sending them at enormous rates of transportation through the mails.

THE GIRLS OF NEW HAMPSHIRE. Fourteen young women of Brentwood, New Hampshire, went a few nights since to the house of an aged farmer who has sent three sons to the war, and husked one hundred bushels of corn for him.

OLD PAPERS. In a chamber at Salisbury, (N. H.), the Statesman says, was recently found fifteen hundred pounds of old papers and pamphlets, which sold at the paper mill for seventy-five dollars. The present is a golden moment for the sale of all such rubbish.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS. For a substantial gift buy a pair of Boots or Shoes of Cummings and the giver will long be remembered.

JEWELRY. We would invite the attention of our readers to the advertisement of John O. Holden in another column. His store is one of the best places in this State to buy good jewelry.

ARMY LETTERS. A writer in the Boston Journal says—"Allow me through your journal to impress upon the minds of the friends of the soldiers the importance, in directing their letters, of giving the number of the regiment and the letter of the company, and also of putting Mass. V. M., instead of M. V. M., on the envelope. Thousands of letters never reach the soldiers because they are not directed properly."

LECTURE. We would call the attention of our readers to a Free Lecture to be given by our townsman, Lyander S. Richards, Esq. on Tuesday evening next.

AN AFFECTING INCIDENT is told of the Maine railroad disaster. Of the three families in Maiden who were bereft of husband and father, it is a remarkable fact that in each family there are six young and dependent children; making eighteen in one neighborhood, almost within a stone's throw of each other, who are left fatherless and unprovided for.

CHRISTMAS IS COMING. No prettier or more useful gift can be made to a Lady, or Miss, than a pair of those beautiful Anklets, sold by Cummings.

A MODERN DAVON. It is stated that one of the victims ordered to be executed at Palmyra, Missouri, on the 18th ult., was a man who had a wife and several children dependent altogether upon his daily labor for their support. A young man, knowing the condition of the family, offered himself as a substitute for the husband and father, was accepted, and was one of the ten who were shot.

THE INDIAN TROUBLES. A Washington dispatch says the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied that the Indian troubles in Minnesota originated in the insurrection of the Southern States, and were aided by British emissaries from Canada.

THE BOYS will be expecting their new boots by Christmas. Don't disappoint them but go to Cummings' immediately and select a pair.

ANOTHER ANGEL IN HEAVEN. Helen A., daughter of Cushing Baker, aged thirteen years, passed from the "natural body" to the enjoyment of the "spiritual," on the 9th of December. Her parents will mourn her earthly loss, but are comforted with the knowledge that in spirit she will be with them still.

She passed like a flower from her garden of home, That had partially bloomed in their sunlight of love; She is now among angels forever to roam, And bloom in the gardens of glory above.

M. S. TOWNSEND.

DRESSMAKERS NOT MANUFACTURERS. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has decided that persons who make ladies' dresses to order are not to be considered as manufacturers under the tax act.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.
Written

On the character and action of Lieut. Morton, son of Wm. S. Morton, Esq., who led a Company of Cavalry at the battle of Baton Rouge.

Know ye not in the days when war and when battle,
Assert their dominion and threaten the land?

When the cannon's hoarse roar and the musket-ry's rattle
Shake kingdoms and empires with violent hand?

When confusion, and fear, and dread consternation,
Prevails in our homes and pervades every breast;

When treason, rebellion, and vile usurpation,
Forbid the worn soldier to take to his rest?

Know ye not in these days of great tribulation?
When the sword cuts alike both tyrant and slave,
That humanity's cry, and the voice of the nation,

Will scorn on the coward, and honor the brave?
Tis the law of rewards for services rendered,
'Tis the plain rule of justice, the scales on their poise,

The thanks of the nation by duty engendered,
'Tis the praise of our kindred, 'tis gratitude's voice.

Then thanks be to Morton, tho' young and a stranger,
To the clanking of battle and the trumpet's
shrill blast,

But ah! who when placed in immediate danger,
Could have governed so well and conquered
at last.

There amid the missiles of death ever flying.
On! on, through the helish confusion he pressed,
'Mid the tears and groans of wounded and dying;

First for his country, the foremost and best,
And lo! when victorious what there lay before him?

A city's rich spoils to replenish his purse.
Did he take to himself, that man might adore
him,
The treasures amassed by slavery's curse?

Ah, no! for this was no part of his mission;
O'er him the glittering ore had no power—
Silver and gold had not gained his commission;

'Twas valor and courage in necessity's hour.
But, alas! 'tis always the fate of a treasure,
We fondly would cherish, to wether and die
So he had hardly accomplished his measure,
'When lo! on a sick-bed he was destined to lie!

Can a freeman breathe free on slavery's domain?
Hath bondage no poison to sicken his soul?
Can his eye view a land cursed with slavery's stain,

And his senses and health retain their control?
There's nothing like sickness to weaken a soldier,
Or any, indeed, whatever their strength.

The powerful arm and the muscular shoulder,
Must tremble and falter and wither at length.
He was nursed in a clime where freedom is written

On every brow by the hand of our God.
No thralldom has cursed, no bondage has smitten,
The land of the free, where no tyrant hath trod.
He faltered, he fell, while one of the number,
A brother in battle, lay stretched by his side;

He gazed on his friend then sank to his slumber,
He roused him again, but his comrade had died.
Stern death now before him, and he ever pinning,

No groan 'scaped his lips, his eye had no
tears;
But he lay on his couch serenely reclining,
His thoughts with his God, and a stranger to fears.

But soon he recovered, and home to the cradle—
Home, home to "the cradle of liberty" came,
To breathe the free air until he is able
To meet the stern foe in battle again.

Oh Quincy! fair Quincy! thou dutiful mother
Of heroes and statesmen, both gallant and sage,

Receive to thy breast the form of another,
And pencil his name on thy glittering page.
Success to thee, Morton, may thy name forever
Duck history's page, and be faded in story;

May defeat and misfortune come to thee never,
But triumph successfully crown thee with glory.

Anecdotes.

A good story is related of a President of Amherst College. One morning before recitations, some students fastened a live goose to the President's chair. When the President entered the room and discovered the new occupant of the seat, he turned on his heel, coolly observing:

Gentlemen, I perceive you have a competent instructor, and I therefore leave you to your studies.

Little Herby asked his mother what "blood relations" meant. She explained to him that it signified near relatives, etc. After thinking a moment, he said:

"Then, mother, you must be the bloodiest relation I've got!"

A negro boy was driving a mule, when the animal suddenly stopped, and refused to budge.

Won't go, you? said the boy. Feel grand, don't you? I suppose you forget your father was a jacksass!

An Irishman said, the only way to stop suicide is to make it a capital offence punishable with death!

Miscellaneous.

Gathering as it Goes.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

Uprising from the street,
Where fall the mages' feet,
A voice was heard to cry:—
Will of

BEULAH WOOD,

late of Quincy, in the County of Norfolk,
now deceased, testate and has taken a valid last will, by giving bonds as the law requires, and all persons having demands upon the said deceased are required to present the same, and all persons indebted to the said deceased are called upon to make payment to GEORGE VEAZIE, Ex-
Administrator, Quincy, Dec. 20th, 1862.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.
Norfolk, ss. Probate Ct.

Be it remembered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said deceased are called upon to present
the same, and all persons indebted to the said deceased are called upon to make payment to GEORGE VEAZIE, Ex-
Administrator, Quincy, Dec. 20th, 1862.

Save Her, Father!

Guide her, Father! the night is dreary,
She's alone, and she's weary;
From the sky the stars have faded—
As her dearest hopes are shaded.
Trembling her heart with unknown fear,
Filled with passions wild,
Finding no protection here—
Father, guide thy child!

Shield her, Father! the winds are blowing,
She sees not the way where she is going;
Ruler sweeps the storm, and colder;
In thy arms, oh Father, fold her!
Deceived in trusting those too dear,
While these dark hours be,
Let thy holy love make clear
The way that leads to Thee.

Save her, Father! thou best and dearest:
Thou who answerest to her heart;
Save! for lo, her footsteps falter;
Lead her yet to thine own altar;
For life's ways are cold and rough,
She treadeth to the grave;
She has tasted woe enough—
Oh Father, shield and save!

A Friend.

How many lovely things we find
In earth, and air, and sea—
The distant bells upon the wind,
The blossoms on the tree;
But lovelier far than these or flower,
A valued friend in sorrow's hour.

Sweet is the word of a kind
When warbling on the spray,
And beautiful the moon's pale beam
That lights us on our way;
Yet lovelier friendship's look and word
Than moonlight or than warbling bird.

How prized the coral and the shell,
And valued, too, the pearl;
Who can the hidden treasures tell
Of which the soft waves curl?
Yet dearest still a friend to me
Than all in earth, or air, or sea.

Straps.

A BAD DEBT. Good Queen Bess, when she visited Worcester, borrowed 200 pounds of the Corporation, which still stands as a bad debt on the town books.

AN ECONOMICAL PEDDING. Take a large coffee cup of Tapioca or Sago, soak it in a quart of cold water, add a cup of sugar a little salt and cinnamon or nutmeg and lemon peel,
and pour this on seven apples nicely peeled and cored, and placed in a pudding dish; bake this and you will have not only a very cheap,
but a very delicious pudding.

ROOSTER CAKE. (This is a queer name, nevertheless the cake may be good.—Ed.)
2 cups sugar, 1 cup butter, 4 eggs, 1 teaspoonful saleratus, and a little dried fruit. Drop it into a dripping pan, and bake 15 minutes in a hot oven.

MOLASSES CORN CAKE. Two cups corn meal, one cup wheat flour, two cups molasses,
one cup sweet milk, one egg, one teaspoonful salt, one teaspoonful soda, two teaspoonful cream tartar, lump of butter size of an egg. Bake two hours.

Keep in good-humor—anger is pure waste of vitality. No man does his best except when he is cheerful. A light heart makes nimble hands, and keeps the mind free and alert.

Anna Maria Story was married to Bob Short. A very pleasant way of "making a story short."

A military officer, one day, while reviewing his company happened to be thrown from his horse, and as he lay sprawling on the ground, said to a friend who ran to his assistance:

"I thought I had improved in horsemanship,
but I find I have fallen off."

A dandy, smoking a cigar, having entered a menagerie, the proprietor requested him to take the weed from his mouth, lest he should teach the other monkeys bad habits.

The tasks set to children should be moderate. Over exertion is hurtful, both physically and intellectually, and even morally.

It has been beautifully said that the veil which covers the face of futurity is woven by the hand of mercy.

A temperance editor, in drawing attention to an article against ardent spirits in one of the inner pages of his paper, says:

"For the effects of intemperance, see our made."

All diseases speak to us solemnly and elo-quently, except the dumb ague.

round the legs to accommodate the diminutive stature of the actual wearer; a pair of thick-soled worn-out bluchers, and a shape-less roll, something like black cloth, which served ordinarily for a cap, but was now twisted up hard between his hands, completed the costume of little Joe, as he stood, digging his hob-nailed boots into the Turkey carpet, in the centre of the room, facing the pleasant looking gentleman who had sought this interview. Notwithstanding the novelty of his situation, Joe retained his self-possession, and, having, by a keen glance examined the countenance of Mr. Maudsley, and being apparently satisfied by the result of his investigation, he made a rapid but curious review of the room and its contents, commencing with the ornamental clock on the chimney-piece, and ending with the cold roast beef and the game pie that adorned the sideboard, over which hung the portrait of the fortunate proprietor of all these good things, smiling and looking down upon them with an expression of expansive good nature, such as
at that moment diffused itself over the features of its original, while surveying the odd specimen of humanity before him.

What is your name, my little fellow?
asked Mr. Maudsley, opening the proceedings in the strictly legal manner; and this reminds me I have not yet informed the reader that he was a solicitor—an honest, and, indeed, excellent man, with a heart large enough for at least a dozen ordinary attorneys.

What is your name, my little fellow?
Joe Gimber, sir.

Who is your father?
Never had a father, sir; least wise, I never heard I had one. I'm mother's child.

Your mother, then, where is she?
Gone dead three years next Easter, sir.
She had me and two sisters younger than me to keep. She worked at catching all day and all night over, but she couldn't get a living out of it, and so she died.

What, then, became of your sisters?
They were taken into the workhouse, and they told me that they died too.

Why did you not go into the workhouse with your sisters?

Well, sir, I didn't much like it; I thought I'd rather be independent, said the little fellow, with a resolute air.

Independent! repeated Mr. Maudsley, looking incredulously at the child. What on earth could you do?

Oh! please, sir, I could do lots of things.
First, I went into the noos line, and delivered papers for a noo-verder to his customers, but he paid me nuffin to speak of, and I was nearly starved afore I left him; then I took
to a costermonger, and sold apples, oranges, and radishes, and wedgables of all sorts; but my master was a bad lot, and knocked me about shakin' when I couldn't sell his stale stuff, so I was forced to try winkles on my own hook.

Winkles! what are winkles? enquired his puzzled interrogator.

Oh! sir! don't you know winkles? penwinkles some people calls 'em.

Oh! I understand—penwinkles.

Penwinkles and strimps, sir, and sometimes an sandwiches at the door of the thayers;
only the bobbies hunt us as if we was thieves, which I never was. Now and again, when there was a thick fog, I makes a tidy day's work by carrying a link afore old gentlemen who's afraid of losing their way or getting run over. Then there's money to be picked up by a street crossing; but the wooden-legged coves, and them ingen blacks in white bedgowns, have got hold of all the good ones, and they won't give them up without a tidy bit o' money.

And you have not been able to purchase one?

No, sir; but I work werry hard, and when there's a fall o' snow I have plenty o' work scrapping afore the doors, and get well paid
for it, too.

Since you have told me so much of yourself and your life, Joe, tell me what were you thinking of when I saw you just now watching with such a serious face the making of that large snowball in the street; for you were thinking of something more than the mere collection of a quantity of snow?

Joe turned his keen eye a moment upon his questioner, and appeared to hesitate; he had freely related every thing respecting his way of life—his misery and his struggles he did not seek to conceal; but when for the first time an attempt was made to penetrate his mind, to unlock the mystery of his thoughts,
he felt embarrassed and surprised. His hesitation was, however, brief, and he replied, with something like a knowing twinkle of the eye—

I was thinkin' that a chap who wants to git on in the world, ought to be like that snowball—always gathering as it goes!
True, quite true, said Mr. Maudsley, smiling, but it is not worldly wealth alone that maxim applies; the mind should be equally diligent in the acquisition of knowledge and of virtue, without which the possession of riches adds nothing to man's happiness. If he would be truly great, he must be truly good. Patience, industry, and perseverance, are his handmaids—truth, justice, and humanity lie in his path—the wise man makes these his own, and gathers peace and happiness as he goes.

There was something in the manner in which these few words were spoken which sunk into the child's heart. He uttered not a word, but Mr. Maudsley perceived that he felt what had been said, and he secretly determined to make an attempt to rescue the poor outcast from his degraded position.

The little fellow was, by his direction, immediately placed in the hands of the coachman's wife in the adjoining mews, who, by the application of soap and water, combs and brushes, and an entire change of his costume for a suit of her eldest son's clothes, was shortly transformed into a respectable looking boy. Being thus rendered presentable, he was introduced to the kitchen, where he quickly ingratiated himself with the members of the "lower house" by his obliging manners, and a certain whimsical drollery, which even the serious footman, who had a "call," regularly attended Mr. Wallis's chapel, could not resist. His stories of life amongst the wandering tribes of London, were immensely relished, and his imitations of some of the street showmen and ballad singers were declared by the cook and house-maid
to be equal to a play.

The Christmas dinner at Mr. Maudsley's was a great affair; for a large party of the relations on both sides of the house had assembled to do honor to the festival. In the evening, there was a general demand for a dance amongst the young people, and one of Mr. Maudsley's sisters, who didn't dance, undertook to supply the music on the piano.
Little Joe, who heard in the kitchen the beating of the merry feet overhead, expressed a strong desire to witness the dance, and by the contrivance of one of the servants was smuggled behind a large Indian screen that had been placed in front of a glass door at the upper end of the room communicating with the conservatory. Mounted on a flower stand, and hidden from observation by the screen, Joe Gimber peeped through the evergreens with which it was decorated, and beheld a scene that completely bewildered him.
As the light and graceful forms of the children flitted before him in the dance, their cherms glowing with health and happiness, and their eyes sparkling with enjoyment—he fancied himself transported to some fairy land; his heart beat violently, and his eyes dazzled with the light; he vainly tried to follow the waltzers in their merry round; his head became giddy, and forgetting for the moment where he was, he clasped his hands in uncontrollable delight; and leaning forward with too little caution to get a nearer view of a pretty little sylphide, in a pale blue stock, who had more than any of the others attracted his admiration, the screen was thrown down, and Joe Gimber falling with it, rolled suddenly into the midst of the dancers.

A general scream greeted the unexpected appearance of this strange guest, who, hastily picking himself up, would have made a precipitate retreat had not Mr. Maudsley come forward and called him to remain. The matter was shortly explained, and Joe, instead of being ignominiously expelled from the room,
became an object of curiosity to the company,
by whom his pockets were filled with sweetmeats and fruit, intermixed with a few bits of silver, the little sylphide who had been the cause of his mischance, bestowing upon him an illustrated box of bonbons with a smile that made the offering doubly sweet. This was Joe Gimber's first introduction to polite society. That night he slept in a little bed made up for him in the harness room by the jolly coachman and his cozy wife. While undressing, he had time to admire his improved appearance, to survey his comfortable lodging, to produce his store of sweetmeats and pick out the glittering coins from a heap of raisins and burnt almonds. Full of the most agreeable reflections, he fell asleep to dream that he was transformed into a giantic snowball, rolled by the pretty sylphide
over heaps of sixpences and sugar plums which stuck to him on every side. Joe had made the first roll in life.

A few days after the events just narrated,
Joe was taken into the establishment of Messrs. Maudsley and Wotherspoon, solicitors, of Bedford-row, where his duties consisted in sweeping out the offices and dusting the desks before the arrival of the clerks in the morning, and in carrying messages and parcels for a few hours during the day.
Mr. Maudsley did not, however, stop here with his kindness; for he permitted Joe to attend an evening school, where true to the maxim which he had made the rule of his life, he gathered learning with incredible rapidity. In the house where he lodged, there was also a Frenchman, who had come to prosecute a claim for a legacy which had been left him in this country. With this person, Joe formed an intimacy; and for some acts of civility rendered to him by the boy, he undertook to teach him the French tongue. This was what he ardently desired;

and a few months instruction made him so proficient in the language that he could not only write it with ease, but converse fluently
in it.

Three years had passed away, during which time Joe, by his assiduity and good temper, had become a prime favorite in the office; the elderly chief clerk and the heads of the establishment liked him for his punctuality and integrity, and the young men for the readiness with which he always executed their little commissions—but more, perhaps,
for the confidence they had that he was neither a "spy" or a "sneak," and that their harmless "larks" and venial breaches of discipline would never be brought to the ears of the governors through Joe Gimber's instru-mentality. He was therefore pronounced by common consent, "a brick," "a bean," and
"a trump;" and when, at the end of three years, he was promoted to a seat at a desk
in their office, he received the warm congratulations of his fellow clerks. As Joe jerked himself for the first time on the tall stool which he was thenceforth to occupy in the office, he thought of the snowball, and felt that he was then a much greater person than the evening he rolled amongst the company in Mr. Maudsley's drawing room.

It was some months after Joe's elevation that a case came into the office which required that a confidential agent should be sent to Paris; none of the clerks, however, spoke French, and the business was on the point of being confided to a stranger, when it was recollected by the managing clerk that Joe Gimber had been seen reading a French book. He was immediately questioned, and being found competent for the duty, he was sent to Paris, where he not only brought the affair to a satisfactory issue, but laid the foundation of a very lucrative business for the office, which was recognized by the partners giving him a considerable increase of salary and an advance in his position in the establishment. Thus, by his roll to Paris, Joe Gimber, true to his rule of life, gathered much and lost nothing.

He was now a person of some consequence,
and, being placed at the head of one of the legal departments in the office, was invited as a guest to Mr. Maudsley's house. The little sylphide in blue had grown into a beautiful girl; and as Joe—wag his pardon—Mr.
Joseph Gimber—was by no means a bad looking fellow, it was not surprising that Kate Maudsley should look with favoring eyes upon him. An incident which I am obliged to confess was singularly unromantic, led to what in affairs of the heart is called an "interesting discovery." It happened in this way: Kate was one evening busily engaged at a table near a window in the drawing room when Joseph entered. Oh! Mr.
Gimber, she cried, I am so glad you are come, for you can help me to string these beads; they have nearly tired me out of patience.

The young man was delighted, and immediately set about his task—but, whether from awkwardness or his thoughts being otherwise occupied, he repeatedly pricked his fingers with the needle, and at length let the box
fall on the floor. Gimber, in great confusion, begged pardon for his awkwardness, and stooped to gather the beads which rolled about the carpet at the same instant that Kate had bent forward with the same intention. I can't pretend to say how it occurred, but their cheeks accidentally touched in the attempt; both drew back, blushed, and mutually apologized; again they stooped, and again the lady's curls lightly brushed the gentleman's whiskers; this time, however, the blush was accompanied by a smile. The smile was a preface to certain disclosures which I do not feel myself at liberty to repeat. I may, however, state that, although the beads remained scattered on the carpet, Joe had succeeded in obtaining from the lips
of the fair Kate the rapturous confession that he was not wholly indifferent to her.
In this way did Mr. Joseph Gimber gather to himself the affections of a lovely girl.

My readers must now leap with me over several years, and imagine that we have reached the fiftieth anniversary of the Christmas on which Joe Gimber learnt his great lesson of life from the rolling snowball. It is night; but a rich, ruddy radiance streams from the crimson-curtained windows of Mr. Mauds-ley's house upon the cold, white snow without.
Let us enter, and see what changes time has wrought beneath that roof. Mr. Maudsley having run an honorable and prosperous career, has retired from active life, and has transferred his interest in Bedford-row business to his son-in-law, Mr. Joseph Gimber, now second partner in the firm of Wotherspoon, Gimber & Co. Age has, it is true, taken from the old man much of his elasticity of mind and body; but he can still calmly enjoy the pleasures of existence, and mingle in the festivities of Christmas; which are still kept up with much genial hospitality by his children, in whom he lives again. Of my hero, it is enough to say, that prosperity has not rendered him unmindful of the claims of the poor; for although, as he says, the wise man gathers like the snowball, as he goes, 'tis the good man who dispenses of his abundance to those who need it:

Kind hearts can make December blithe as May,
And in each corner find a Christmas day.

How to Take Care of the Hair.

As to men, we say, when the hair begins to fall out, the best plan is to have it cut short, give it a good brushing with a moderately stiff brush, while the hair is dry, then wash it well with warm soap suds, then rub into the scalp, about the roots of the hair, a little bay rum, brandy or camphor water. Do these things twice a month—the brushing of the scalp may be profitably done twice a week. Damp the hair with water every time the toilet is made. Nothing ever made is better for the hair than pure soft water, if the scalp is kept clean in the way we have named.

The use of oils, of pomatums, or grease, of any kind, is ruinous to the hair of man or woman. We consider it a filthy practice, almost universal though it be, for it gathers dust and dirt, and soils wherever it touches.
Nothing but pure soft water should ever be allowed on the head of children. It is a different practice that robs our women of their most beautiful ornament, long before their prime; the hair of our daughters should be kept within two inches until their twelfth year.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Betsy's Courting Sensations.

There is a dear good old lady in our "de-strict," who has for a daughter an "unkinmon" cross old girl, who has not been burdened with a surplus of attention from the opposite "sex." Her mother wonders "why on earth the fellows don't come to see Betsey?" But, mirabile dictu! last Sunday night Betsey had a beau, and they "sot up," and the old lady was extremely delighted. Monday morning, when her fair daughter came down to her morning meal, the old lady exclaimed, with pleasant emphasis:

"Well, Betsey, my dear, how do you feel this morning?"

Betsey glared at her a moment, and then
tut-tut-tut, in deep low tones:

"Feel as though I could eat 'ulbin."

Betsey wasn't accustomed to "settin' up,"
you see.

The Human Voice.

God has made the whole earth vocal with sweet sounds. The untraveled forest echoes the notes of the wild bird, and the habitations of men are made glad by the song of the feathered minstrel. But, above all, the human voice, that combines the highest charm of sweet sounds with the inspiration of thought, is given for no ordinary purpose of earthly pleasure. In its whisper of affection how grateful! For its participation in joy how unexpressable!

Choosing Husbands.

When a girl marries, why do people talk of her choice? In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, has she any choice? Does not the man, probably the last she would have chosen, select her? A lady writer says:

"I have been married many years; the match was considered a good one—suitable in every respect—age, position, and fortune.
Every one said I had made a good choice. I loved my husband when I married him because he had by unwearied assiduity succeeded in gaining my affections; but had choice been my privilege, I certainly should not have chosen him. As I look at him in his easy chair, sleeping before the fire, a huge dog at his feet, a pipe peeping out of his shooting-coat, I cannot but think how different he is from one which I would have chosen. My first penchant was for a cler-gyman; he was a flatterer, and cared but little for me, though I have not forgotten the pangs of his desertion. My next was a lawyer, a young man of immense talent, smooth, insinuating; but he, too, after walking, talking, dancing, and flirting, left me. Either of these two would have been my choice; but my present husband chose me, and I married him. And this, I cannot help thinking, must be the way with half the married folks of my acquaintance.

The Wearing of Mourning.

There are many very obvious reasons why this expensive and demonstrative show of private sorrow is, as a custom objectionable.
A correspondent of the National Intelligencer, argues against it, saying that the world is melancholy enough without this, and the stricken heart is its own memento.

IT IS NOT A DYE.

falling off, and soon restored the color,

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Dec. 27th, 1862.

"Born to no Master, of no Sect are we."

CHRISTMAS. We trust our readers had a merry one. A happy and prosperous one. On the eve of its advent, the accumulation of toys and other rich presents to be found at the fancy depots of such articles, led us to conclude, that our juvenile friends, at least, would not be forgotten—but that on the morrow, many a young heart would be made glad and to leap with joy, as they bounded from their beds to examine their stockings. The weather was quite open—and the appearance around us was, that all were enjoying an old fashioned Christmas.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR. We must take time by the forelock—for before another turn in our business, the day will have come and passed. We therefore, extend to you gentle reader, the congratulations of the season; to our patrons, one and all, who have so nobly sustained us, "A HAPPY NEW YEAR;" to the press, for their courtesy, and general "amiability," our hearty thanks; and to the rest of mankind, heaven's choicest blessings.

LIEUTENANT MORTON. We were honored by a visit from the Lieutenant, one day this week. He still bears the marks of fatigue and sickness. The fiery ordeal which he passed through at Baton Rouge, and the debilitating effects of a Southern climate, at the most trying season of the year, was too much for a constitution not over robust; but under the renovating effects of his native climate, he has nearly recovered his former health, and will leave here for New Orleans, on Monday next. We are authorized to say, that any dispatch or letters to soldiers in Regiments stationed there, he would be happy to be the bearer of.

ANOTHER CALL UPON THE CHARITABLE. By reference to our advertising columns, it will be seen that the Ladies' Soldiers' Aid Association of this place, are making every effort to mitigate the pressing wants of our patient and suffering soldiers. The entertainment which they offer for Wednesday evening next, is a rich one, and should draw them hosts of friends—especially when it is considered, that the funds so raised, are to be applied to so charitable and deserving an object. Our soldiers need our sympathy and aid; we approve of the cause in which they are engaged; it is then, for us, plainly our duty to sustain them in their patriotic and self-sacrificing labors.

Let there be no holding back this time—but a general turn-out—in a grand march to the music of the Union.

Contributions for the Refreshment Table from those disposed to aid the object, will be thankfully received at the Hall on the 31st, before 3 o'clock, p. m.

ANOTHER QUINCY SOLDIER KILLED.—Capt. Richardson of the 24th Mass. Regiment is in Boston for a few days. He left Newbern, North Carolina, on the 22d inst., and reports that one of his corporals, Richard Lewis, of this town, was shot during the expedition to Goldsboro. Mr. Lewis has lived for many years in the west part of this town, where he leaves a kind and devoted wife and a little daughter to mourn his loss.

A DARING ROGUE. We are sorry to learn that Thomas G. Emerson of this town, had his watch and chain stolen from his vest, while purchasing tickets at the box office of the Boston Museum, on Christmas afternoon. Mr. Emerson seized the thief and gave the alarm. Detective Colder at once took him into custody and searched him, but the rogue had succeeded in passing the property to an accomplice. The thief proved to be Charles Scott, an old offender, and he was committed to the Toms. While in the office there he made his escape and went at railroad speed through Court to Washington street, where he was again arrested. His theftship had his trial on Thursday, and was sentenced to one year's imprisonment.

ARMY CORRESPONDENCE. Among the numerous communications of this kind, which we have seen, we know of none that we have read with more interest than those of Charles H. Whiting, son of Henry G. Whiting, of this place. Charles was a member of the 1st Massachusetts Cavalry Regiment, which experienced some hard service in South Carolina, but subsequently has been joined to the army of the Potomac. From a recent letter, we learn, that he has been taken from the ranks to fill a post, not of so much danger, it is true, but of more responsibility. One fine trait, which pervades his correspondence, is, that he always has a kind word to say for his officers. In his last, alluding to Charles Francis Adams, Jr., son of Charles Francis Adams, our Minister to England, who has lately been promoted to the command of the Company to which he is attached, says, he is a noble officer—the Boys are all fond and proud of him; that he has their affections and confidence, and will follow wherever he leads.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONGRESS over for near two weeks is said to have no precedent in Congressional annals.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 24, 1862.

Among the local incidents of the week here, were the ceremonies connected with laying the corner stone of the new City Hall, in presence of the City Government, and two or three hundred spectators. From the address of the Mayor we learn that the first Town House in Boston, was erected about the year 1658 of wood, on the spot where the Old State House stands in State Street. It was burnt by the great fire in 1711. Another was built afterwards on the same site, and burnt in 1747. In 1748, the present Old State House was erected; and for many years occupied by the General Court of the Commonwealth, the Supreme and County Courts and as a Town House. In 1742, Peter Faneuil donated the celebrated Faneuil Hall to the town of Boston; which was occupied for eighty years for Municipal purposes. The new City Hall about to be erected on Court Square, will be built of white granite from the quarries at Concord, New Hampshire, under the control of those well known, enterprising gentlemen of Milton, Messrs. Penniman, Sheldon, Hollis and Sargent. The building, which may be completed in about one year, will be a magnificent structure and an ornament to the city.

The unsettled state of public affairs, has shaken confidence in business operations, which are limited and less cheerful than last week. Touching financial affairs, there is a despondency in the stability and firmness of the General Government, which runs through all business classes. The latest programme from the Secretary of the Treasury, is, that he has completed his financial bill, recommending a nine hundred million loan, at not over 7-30 per cent. per annum, and the repeal of the 5-20 conversion act. He adheres firmly to the opinion in his Annual Report, that the money can be raised by loan. Soon our Government indebtedness will reach a national debt of one billion of dollars! and a loan of this sum to the General Government at a low rate of interest, payable at long periods, by instalments, seems now the only practical method. At all events, the matter of raising money is one of the most important subjects before Congress. Another great measure is the Bankrupt Bill, which has long been asked both by debtors and creditors. A grand idea has been suggested, that instead of entering into all the details of law, which always creates delay, a brief Bill be passed, declaring who shall be insolvent, and containing other important matters, and that the Attorney General be empowered to draft regulations for putting it into effect.

The reported Cabinet embroglio, have created great excitement here the present week—the subject is on every tongue. We have a President, amiable and patriotic, but who lacks firmness and decision—qualities essential in the National Executive. To the moment of my writing, there is no certain evidence of any Cabinet resignation, notwithstanding the busy word of dame rumor. A majority of the Republican Senators seem determined that the President shall re-construct his Cabinet; the President demurs; and thus a war is kindled between the Executive and Congress. And it is said this evening, unless the President yields, it will soon be Congress against Executive; the issue of this struggle, already begun in a bad spirit, is likely to end in serious consequences. In the mean time, the sovereign people, looking at Washington and witnessing these unhappy feuds, are rapidly losing their confidence in the Administration. A more vigorous policy is called for to prosecute the war, by one portion; the unfurling the Abolition standard to the breeze as the only means to put down the rebellion; and by another portion, to ignore the slavery question until peace is conquered. The advocates of the first measure, demand a Cabinet of radical anti Slavery men, and that Seward, Blair, Stanton and others, must go overboard; the advocates of the latter, favor the selection of conservative men—that the war against the South is not waged on our part in any spirit of oppression, or for any purpose of conquest or subjugation, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution and to preserve the Union and the rights of the States unimpaired; and as soon as these objects are accomplished, the war should cease. It remains to be seen what course President Lincoln, now sorely vexed by importunities from the Republican Senate, will pursue. A few days will develop perhaps, important events in the political history of the country.

AN ENORMOUS HOTEL has just been completed in St. Louis, which is thus described: It is eight stories high; contains five hundred and fifteen rooms, twenty-one parlors, twenty-seven acres of plastering, seven acres of flooring, thirty-two miles of bell-wire, nine and a half miles of base board, twelve miles of gas, steam and water pipe, one and one-eighth miles, or one thousand nine hundred and ten windows, and fourteen thousand feet of painted imitation of cornice. The quantity of bricks used in the building is eight million. In the basement there is a railway running the entire length, for the transportation of heavy articles, and above are two steam elevators for lifting fuel and baggage from the ground to the floors above.

Weymouth and Braintree INSTITUTE FOR SAVINGS. The Annual Meeting of the Members of the Corporation of the Weymouth and Braintree Institution for Savings, for the choice of Officers for the year ensuing, will be held at the Office of the Institution, on MONDAY, January 12th, 1863, at 2 o'clock, P. M. A. S. WHITE, Treasurer. Weymouth, Dec. 27 3w

Administratrix's Notice. NOTICE is hereby given, that the Subscribing has been duly appointed Administratrix, of the Goods and Estate of O. M. KENDALL, late of Weymouth, in the County of Norfolk, Boat Manufacturer, deceased, and has taken legal notice that trust by giving bonds, as the law directs. And all persons having demands upon the Estate of said deceased, are required to exhibit the same, and all persons indebted to said estate are called upon to make payment to SARAH M. KENDALL, Adm'x. EBEN T. BLOOD, Attorney. Weymouth, Dec. 27th, 1862. 3w

For the Patriot.

Wounded in Co. K. 18th Regt.

NEAR PALMOUTH, VA., Dec. 16, 1862.

To the Publisher of the Patriot.—Our Regiment left Camp on the 11th inst., crossed the river on the 13th, and charged the enemies works near the centre. We were repulsed with great loss but maintained our ground until this morning, when we recrossed the river and returned to camp, having suffered all that could be crowded into that space of time. I hear our loss estimated at twenty thousand; theirs at five thousand. I have no means of ascertaining the truth of these numbers but think the proportion about right. Our Regiment lost in killed and wounded 136; namely, Officers 11, enlisted men 125. There were none killed in Co. K, which behaved splendidly; the following are the names of the wounded:

Lieut. A.W. Sturdy, very badly in the foot. Sergeant James Cullback, slightly. Corporal W. D. Smith, in the hand. Private J. Q. Jacobs, in the arm. Private P. Dulin, in the shoulder. Private H. F. Packard, severely, in the side. Private N. S. Barry, in the hand. Private Alonzo Howard, in the arm. Private P. Kennedy, in the leg. Private Edward Cain, in the arm. Yours in haste, B. F. MESERVEY, Capt. Co. K.

COUNTERFEIT FIFTY CENT NOTES of the new postage currency are in circulation.—They are on thinner paper than the genuine ones. The five faces of Washington are unlike each other. The linked letters, "U. S." do not show the lower end of the "S" inside of the leg of the "U," as in the genuine. They may be distinguished by these marks and by some other variations.

GREAT MEN USED TO WEIGH MORE.—McClellan is a snug built little fellow, weighing about 150 pounds. But compare this with the following record of the weight of the officers of the Revolutionary army, as weighed at West Point in 1795: General Washington, 269 pounds; General Lincoln, 224; General Knox, 200; General Huntington, 195; General Greathouse, 166; Colonel Swift, 219; Colonel Michael Jackson, 252; Colonel Henry Jackson, 239; Lieutenant-Colonel Huntington, 212; Lieutenant-Colonel Cobb, 182, and Lieutenant-Colonel Humphrey, 211.

RICHARD'S HEATER. This is a new invention under the sun—nevertheless, none the less important. We have had one of them on trial in our family, and like it much. Its construction is very simple; so adapted as to cut off the draught at a certain stage of the fire, to prevent the sparks and heat from passing up the chimney—retaining them in a chamber connected with the funnel, to be used in diffusing a more uniform and genial warmth throughout the room. It is thought by some, who have tested their merits, that a third of the fuel may be saved by their use. They are certainly a great economizer in this respect, as well as a convenience and comfort.

FAMILY GROCERIES AND GENERAL FINDING STORE. Those in want of articles in this line would do well to call on the store of Joseph Arty, Jr., on Temple street. He has a large assortment, well selected, of a prime quality, which he is selling at a moderate figure. We know of no place where a dollar can be spent more profitably.

BARNEY'S MUSEUM AND AQUARIUM GARDENS, on Washington street, Boston. The opening of this splendid establishment, last week, with a vaudeville theatre, added greatly to its already numerous attractions. The performances were of a high order of ability, reflecting great credit upon the actors. Its success thus far, has been most flattering.

In an opening address, Mr. Barney says: "Experience has demonstrated to me that there are many ladies and children, strangers and 'Country Cousins,' in every large city, who occasionally of an afternoon would like to attend a strictly moral and proper place of family amusement; and when I reflect and consider what an immense number of visitors may come to Boston from our suburban towns by means of the horse railroads, I am sure that one establishment in Boston, producing such entertainments as I shall provide, will be liberally attended every day and evening. And here let me say, that I am by no means unaware of the great influence for good which this establishment is capable of exerting upon the public mind. I appreciate the responsibility of my position, and I therefore gladly give my pledge to families and the better portion of the community to keep this Museum always free from every objectionable feature."

The Aquarial department will receive the same care and attention as before, and every means used to enhance its interest.

A SHORT RETORT. A few days ago General Harding, who has lately arrived at Nashville from Mackinac, called upon General Negley for protection papers, saying that his beautiful farm and houses were almost destroyed, and that he desired protection from further injury, believing that he had paid the penalty for his folly. You are mistaken, Mr. Harding, rejoined the General, the penalty for treason is death.

A FINE TYPE. At the Great Exhibition, as a specimen of fine type and printing, there is a copy of the entire New Testament printed upon a single sheet of paper. It was printed by Collins, of Glasgow, the celebrated publisher of rare and beautiful books.

A MAN FOR THE TIMES. At the Catawagus, New York County Fair, a Mr. Wealmeath, of Rushford, made his appearance clad entirely in garments made by himself and family. Even his shoes were made of the hide of one of his own cows tanned by himself.

Men, boys and youths' calf Congress boots; sure to give good satisfaction, may be bought at Geo. L. Gill's, 84 Hancock street.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.
Our Fathers' Flag.

BY F. M. ADLINGTON—WEYMOUTH.

TUNE—SOLDIER'S RETURN.

The flag our gallant fathers' gave,
Above our heads is streaming;
The banner of the just and brave,
With star gem'd beauty beaming.

That glorious signal of the free,
Like heav'n's bright pointers ranging;
Show the true north—for Liberty;
The North that knows no changing.

On many a bloody battle field,
We bade the foe defiance;
A righteous cause our triple shield,
And God our firm reliance.

And still where'er that banner waves,
Our host, its brave defenders,
Will welcome death and honor'd graves,
Before it e'er surrenders.

Our Country's voice shall be obeyed;
Her sons who love her dearly,
Around her holy flag array'd,
Will prove their titles clearly.

As faithful sons to guard her soil,
To manfully defend her,
Will from her spoiler rend the spoil,
And punish her offender.

We fling our colors to the gale,
And where the cannons rattle,
With fearless hearts that never quail,
We meet the shock of battle.

And when around us comrades fall,
And Death the field is reaping,
Our trust is in the Lord of All,
The waking and the sleeping.

Far better in an honor'd grave,
With Glory's wreath adorning,
Than live and be a traitor, brave—
A thing for others' scorn.

When vict'ry wreaths the soldier's brow
With tokens that he won her,
Return'd triumphant o'er the foe,
Adorn'd with priceless honor.

Who would not wish to have been there,
To win what he effected?
Who would not wish a name to bear
By all mankind respected.

But, hark! he's ready ev'ry man,
The rebel's guns are roaring;
New England's jewels grace our van;
Her eagles proudly soaring.

Now onward brothers to the fight,
The stars are floating o'er us;
May He whose justice loves the right,
Our Captain, go before us.

Haste Not—Rest Not.

BY GOETHE.

Without haste! without rest!
Bind the motto to thy breast!
Bear it with thee as a spell;
Storm or sunshine guard it well!

Haste not!—let no thoughtless deed
Mar force or the spirit's speed;
Ponder well and know the right,
Onward, then, with all thy might!

Rest not! life is sweeping by,
Do and dare before you die;
Something mighty and sublime
Leaves behind to conquer time!

Haste not! rest not! calmly wait,
Meekly bear the storms of fate;
Duty be thy polar guide!
Do the right whate'er betide!

Haste not! rest not!—conflicts past,
God shall crown thy work at last.

Anecdotes.

A Scotch minister was once ordered beef tea by his physician. The next day the patient complained that it had made him sick. Why, minister, said the doctor, I'll try the tea myself. So putting some in a skillet, he warmed it, tasted, and told the minister it was excellent. Man, says the minister, is that the way ye sup it? What other way should it be sup? It's excellent, I say, minister. It may be gude that way, doctor; but try it w' the cream and sugar, and then see hoo ye like it.

An Irishman going to market met a farmer with an owl. Say, mister, what'll yer take for the big-eyed turkey? 'Tis an owl, replied the astonished farmer. D—! a bit do I care whether it's ould or young; price the bird.

We once heard of a rich man who was badly injured by being run over. He said: It isn't the accident that I mind; that isn't the thing, but the idea of being run over by an infernal swill cart makes me mad.

A woman went into an apothecary's shop the other day with two prescriptions—one for her husband and the other for her cow. On inquiring the price, she found she had not money enough for both; then, reflecting a moment, she said: Give me, at all events, the one for the cow. I can send for my husband's to-morrow.

Roll Call.

"Corporal Green!" the Orderly cried:
"Here!" was the answer, loud and clear,
From the lips of a soldier who stood near;
And "Here!" was the word the next replied.

"Cyrus Drew!"—then a silence fell—
This time no answer followed the roll;
Only the rear-aid had seen him fall,
Killed or wounded he could not tell.

There they stood in the falling light,
These men of battle, with grave, dark looks,
As plain to be read as open books,
While slowly gathered the shade of night.

The fern on the hill-sides was splashed with blood,
And down in the cora, where the poppies grew,
We're redder stains than the poppies knew;
And crimson-dyed was the river's flood.

For the foe had crossed from the other side,
That day, in the face of a murderous fire;
That swept them down to its terrible tide,
And their life-blood went to color the tide.

"Herbert Cline!"—At the call there came
Two stalwart soldiers into the line,
Bearing between them this Herbert Cline,
Wounded and bleeding, to answer his name.

"Ezra Kerr!"—and a voice answered
"Here!"—and a voice answered
"Here!"—and a voice answered
"Here!"—and a voice answered

"Ephraim Dean!"—then a soldier spoke:
"I passed a moment and gave him a drink;
He murmured his mother's name, I think;
And death came with it and closed his eyes."

Close to the roadside his body lies,
I passed a moment and gave him a drink;
He murmured his mother's name, I think;
And death came with it and closed his eyes."

"Twas a victory—yes; but it cost us dear;
For that company's roll, when called at night,
Of a hundred men who went into the fight,
Numbered but twenty that answered "Here!"

Scraps.

Words should be seconded by action; it isn't enough for a housewife to say to a stock-keeping with a hole in it, "You be darned."

I have to look upon a young man. There is a hidden potency concealed within his breast which charms and pains me. The daughter of a clergyman happening to find the above sentence at the close of a piece of her father's manuscript, as he had left it in his study, sat down and added: "Them's my sentiments, exactly, papa—all but the 'pains'."

An eminent physician has discovered that the nightmare in nine cases out of ten is produced by owing a bill for a newspaper.

In illustration of the power of fancy, the case of the old lady who watched the vane to see when her rheumatism was going to begin, is not equal to that of the stork-keeper who painted the lower part of his stove red and saved seventy-five per cent. in the consumption of wood during the winter. The illustration was so complete that one man tried to make him pay for a pair of boots that he had burnt at his stove.

A Poughkeepsie farmer has a $5 gold piece, which he means to keep for his children and their children again to look at as the currency which the country once had.

It does not follow that Rome was built in the night, because it wasn't built in a day.

A newspaper writer contends that a man ought to show as much courtesy to his own wife as to his neighbor's wife. That's what superficial people think. Are not a man and his wife one? and wouldn't it be absurd to have a man forever bowing and scraping to himself? "Marry, come up, and go to, now, answer us that!"

Some people will never learn anything for this reason, because they understand everything too soon.

It is beauty's privilege to kill time and time's privilege to kill beauty.

Children always turn toward the light. O, that grown-up people in this world would become like little children.

A good word is an easy obligation, but not to speak ill requires only our silence, which costs us nothing.

Falling in love is like falling into a river; it's much easier getting in than out.

Miscellaneous.

Duty and Kindness.

There was an angry frown on the countenance of Deacon Jonas Browning. There were tears in the sad face of his wife.

He shall be sent to sea! said Deacon Browning, sternly.

There was a pleading look in the eyes of Mrs. Browning, as she lifted them to the iron face of her husband. But no words passed her lips.

He shall be sent to sea! It is my last hope. Philip is very young, Jonas, said Mrs. Browning.

Not too young for evil, and, therefore, not too young for the discipline necessary to eradicate the evil. He shall go to sea! Captain Ellis sails in the Fanny Williams next Monday. I will call upon him this very day.

Isn't the Fanny Williams a whaler? The lips of Mrs. Browning quivered and her voice had a choking sound.

Yes, was firmly answered. I wouldn't send him away in a whaler, Jonas. Remember he is very young, not thirteen till April.

Young or old, Mary, he's got to go, said the stern old Deacon, who was a believer in the gospel of the law. He was no weak advocate of moral suasion, as it is familiarly termed. He went in for law, and was a strict constructionist. Implicit obedience was the statute for him, and deviations therefrom met the never withheld penalty.

Mrs. Browning entered into no argument with her husband, for she knew that would be useless. She had never succeeded in changing his purpose by argument in her life. And so she bent her eyes meekly to the floor again, while the tears crept over her face, and fell in large bright drops upon the carpet. Deacon Browning saw the tears, but they did not move him. He was tear-proof.

Philip, the offending member of the Browning family, was a bright, active, restless boy, who, from the start, had been a rebel against unreasonable authority—and, as a matter of course, not unfrequently against authority both just and reasonable. Punishment had only hardened him, increasing instead of diminishing his power of endurance. The particular offence for which he was now in disgrace, it must be owned, was rather a serious one. He had, in company with three other boys of his age, known as the greatest reprobates in the village, rifled a choice plum tree belonging to a neighbor of all the fruit it contained, and then killed a favorite dog, which happened to see them at their work, and attempted to drive them from the garden. The neighbor had complained to Deacon Browning, accompanying his complaint with a threat to have Philip arrested for stealing.

If you don't do something with that boy of yours, he added, with considerable feeling, he'll end his life in the State Prison or on the gallows.

Hard words were these for the ears of Deacon Browning. Hard words, and with a prophetic conviction in them. He had not a very creative imagination, but in this instance, the prediction of his angry neighbor conjured upon his mind the image of a prison and a gallows, causing a shudder to pass along his nerves, and the cold perspiration to start upon his forehead. From that moment the resolution of Deacon Browning was taken.

The boy was on the brink of ruin, and must be saved, at all hazards. As to the means of doing this it never entered into the heart of Deacon Browning to conceive of any other than involved harsh discipline. The Cannanite was in the land and must be driven out with fire and sword. With him the word duty had a stern significance. He had always tried to do his duty, moving steadily onward in the path of life, and crushing down all vanities and evils that sprang up by the way, under a heel shod with iron.

He shall be sent to sea! That was the last desperate remedy. In his mind, as in the minds of many like him some years ago, a ship was the great school of reform; and when a boy was deemed incorrigible, he was sent off to sea, usually to have his evil inclinations hardened into permanent qualities.

When Deacon Browning met his son Philip, after receiving the intelligence of his great offence, it was with a stern, angry repulsion. He did not see the look of appeal, the sigh of repentance, the plea for mercy, that was in his tearful eyes. A single word of kindness would have broken up the great deep of the boy's heart—and, impelled by warmer impulses inherited from his mother, he would have flung himself weeping into his father's arms. But Deacon Browning had separated duty from kindness. The one was a stern corrector of evil, the other a smiling approver of good.

From his home to the wharf, where the Fanny Williams lay, all equipped for sea, Deacon Browning bent his steps. Captain

Ellis, a rough, hard man, was on board.—After listening to the father's story, and requests, he said bluntly:

If you put your boy aboard the Fanny Williams, he'll have to bend or break, that is certain. Take my advice and give the matter a second thought. He'll have a dog's life of it in a whaler. It is my opinion that your lad hasn't stuff enough in him for this experiment.

I'll risk it, replied the Deacon, he's got too much stuff in him to stay at home, that's certain. The bend or break system is the only one in which I have any faith.

As you like, Deacon; I want another boy, and yours will answer, I guess.

When do you sail? he inquired. On Monday.

Very well, I'll bring the boy down to-morrow.

The thing was settled; the Deacon did not feel altogether comfortable in mind. Philip was young for such an experiment, as the mother had urged. And now very opportunely, a leaf in the book of his life was turned, on which was written the story of a poor boy's wrongs and sufferings at sea.

Many years ago his heart had grown sick over the record. He tried to look away from the page, but could not. It seemed to hold his eyes by a kind of fascination.

Still he did not relent. Duty required him to go steadily forward, and execute his purpose. There was no other hope for the boy.

Philip! It was thus that he announced his determination. I am going to send you to sea with Captain Ellis. It's my last hope. Steadily bent, as you are, on evil, I can no longer suffer you to remain at home. The boy who begins with robbing his neighbor's garden, is in great danger of ending his career upon the gallows. To save you, if possible, from a fate like this, I now send you to sea.

Very sternly, very harshly, almost angrily, was this said. Not the smallest impression did it seem to make upon the boy, who stood with eyes cast down, an image of stubborn self-will and persistent rebellion.

With still deeper denunciation did the father speak, striving in this way to shock the feelings of his child, and extort signs of penitence.

But it was the hammer and the anvil—blow and rebound. Very different were the mother's efforts with the child. Tearfully she pleaded with him—earnestly she besought him to ask his father's forgiveness for the evil he had done. But Philip said:

No, mother. I would rather go to sea. Father don't love me, he don't care for me. He hates me, I believe.

Philip! Philip! Don't speak in that way of your father. He does love you; and it is only for your good that he is going to send you to sea. Oh! how could you do so wicked a thing!

Tears were in the mother's eyes. But the boy had shown something of the father's stern spirit in him, and showed no weakness. It isn't any worse than he did when he was a boy, was the answer.

Philip! Well, it isn't, for I heard Mr. Wright tell Mr. Freeman that father and he robbed orchards and hens' nests; and did worse things than that when they were boys.

Poor Mrs. Browning was silent. Well did she remember how wild a boy Jonas Browning was; and how, when she was a little girl, she had heard all manner of evil laid to his charge.

Very unexpectedly—at least to Mr. Browning—the minister called in the evening of that troubled day. After some general conversation with the family, he asked to have a few words with the Deacon alone.

Is it true, Mr. Browning, he said, after they had retired to an adjoining room, that you are going to send Philip to sea?

Too true, replied the father, soberly. It is my last hope. From the beginning that boy has been a rebel against just authority; and though I have never relaxed discipline through the weakness of natural feelings, yet resistance has grown with his growth, and strengthened with his strength, until duty requires me to use a desperate remedy for a desperate disease. It is a painful trial, but the path of duty is the only path of safety. What we see to be right, we must execute with unflinching courage. I cannot look back and accuse myself of any neglect of duty towards this boy, through weakness of the flesh. From the beginning, I have made obedience the law of my household, and suffered no deviation therefrom to go unpunished.

Duty, said the minister, has a twin sister. He spoke in a changed voice, and in a manner that arrested the attention of Deacon Browning, who looked at him with a glance of enquiry.

She is as lovely and gentle, as he is hard and unyielding.

The Deacon still looked curious.

When the twin sister of duty is away from his side, he loses more than half his influence; but, in her beautiful presence, he gains a dignity and power that make his precepts laws of life to all who bear them. The stubborn heart melts, and the iron will is subdued; the spirit of evil shrinks away from the human soul.

There was a pause.

The name of that twin sister is kindness. The eyes of Deacon Browning fell away from the minister's countenance, and dropped until they rested upon the floor. Conviction flashed upon his heart. He had always been stern in executing the law—but never kind.

Has that beautiful twin sister stood ever by the side of duty? has love been in that law, Deacon Browning?

Side by side with the minister stood Duty and Kindness—the firm, unshrinking brother, and the mild, loving sister—and so his word had power to reach the Deacon's heart, without offending his pride.

Kindness is weak, yielding, and indulgent, and forgives when punishment is the only hope of salvation, said Deacon Browning, little recovering himself from the emotions of self-condemnation.

Only when she strays from the side of duty, replied the minister. Duty and kindness must always act together.

Much more, and to the same purpose, was urged by the minister, who made but a brief visit, and then withdrew, but his admonitions might work the desired effect.

When Deacon Browning came in from the front door of the house, after parting with the minister, he drew up a chair to the table in the family sitting room, and, almost involuntarily, opened the large family Bible.

His feelings were softened towards his boy, who, with his head upon his breast, sat a little apart from his mother. The attitude was not so much indicative of stubborn self-will, as of suffering. Deacon Browning thought he would read a chapter aloud, and so drew the Holy Book closer, and bent his face down over it. Mrs. Browning observing the movement, waited for him to begin. The Deacon cleared his throat twice. But his voice did not take up the words that were in his eyes and in his heart. How could they?

"As a father pitied his children—" Had there been a divine pity in the heart of Deacon Browning for his rebellious and unhappy boy? Nay—had there not been wrath instead?

From a hundred places in the mind of Deacon Browning there seemed to come the echo of these words, and they had a meaning in them never before perceived. He closed the book and remained in deep thought for many minutes; and not only in deep thought but in stern conflict with himself. Kindness was striving to gain her place by the side of duty; and cold, hard, imperious duty, who had so long ruled without a rival in the mind of Deacon Browning, kept all the while averting his countenance from that of his twin sister, who had so long been an exiled wanderer. At last she was successful. The stern brother yielded, and clasped his his bosom the sister he had lost.

From that instant new thoughts, new views, new purposes reigned in the mind of Deacon Browning. The discipline of a whaler was too hard and cruel for his boy; young in years, and by no means as hardened in inquiry as he had permitted himself to imagine. Kindness began whispering in the ears of duty, and filing them with a world of new suggestions. The heart of the stern man was softened, and there flowed into it something of a mother's yearning tenderness. Rising up, at length, Deacon Browning said, in a low voice, so new in its tones to the ear of Philip that it made his heart leap.

My son I wish to see you alone.

The Deacon went into the next room, and Philip followed him. The Deacon sat down and Philip stood before him.

Philip, my son—Deacon Browning took the boy's hand in his, and looked him full in the face. The look was returned—not a defiant look, but of yielding wonder.

Philip, I am not going to send you to sea with Captain Ellis. I intended to do so; but on reflection, I think the life will be too hard for you.

Very firmly, yet kindly, the Deacon tried to speak, but the sister of duty was playing with his heart strings, and their tone of pity and tenderness in his heart, that Philip, melting into penitence, exclaimed, as tears gushed from his eyes:

Oh, Father! I've been very wicked and am sorry!

Involuntarily, at this unexpected confession, the arms of Deacon Browning were stretched out towards the repentant boy, and Philip rushed into them.

The boy was saved. From that hour his father had him under the most perfect subordination. But the twin sister of duty walked ever by his side.

Ingratitude to Parents.

There is a proverb that "a father can more easily maintain six children, than six children one father." Luther relates this story:

There was once a father who gave up everything to his children—his house, his fields and goods—and expected that his children would support him. But after he had been some time with his son, the latter grew tired of him, and said to him, "Father, I have had a son born to me this night, and there, where your arm-chair stands, the cradle must come; will you not perhaps go to my brother, who has a large room?"

After he had been some time with the second son, he also grew tired of him, and said:

Father, you like a warm room, and that hurts my head. Won't you go to my brother, the baker?

The father went, and after he had been some time with the third son, he also found him troublesome, and said to him:

Father, the people run in and out here all day as if it were a pigeon house, and you cannot have your noonday sleep; would you not be better off at my sister Kate's, near the town wall?

The old man remarked how the wind blew, and said to himself:

Yes, I will do so; I will go and try it with my daughter. Women have softer hearts. But after he had spent some time with his daughter, she grew weary of him and said she was always so fearful when her father went to church or any where else, and was obliged to descend the stairs—and at her sister Elizabeth's there were no stairs to descend, as she lived on the ground floor.

For the sake of peace the old man assented, and went to his other daughter. But after some time, she too was tired of him, and told him by a third person, that her house near the water was too damp for a man who suffered with gout, and her sister, the grave-digger's wife, at St. John's, had much drier lodgings. The old man himself thought she was right, and went outside the gate to his younger daughter, Helen. But after he had been three days with her, her little son said to his grandfather:

Mother said yesterday to cousin Elizabeth that there was no better chamber for you than such a one as father digs.

These words broke the old man's heart, so that he sank back in his chair and died.

It's Dark.

The following beautiful sentiment is taken from "Meister Karl's Sketch Book," entitled "The Night of Heaven:"

"It is dark when an honest and honorable man sees the result of long years swept cruelly away by the knavish, heartless adversary. It is dark when he feels the clouds of sorrow gather around, and knows that the hopes and happiness of others are fading with his own. But in that hour the memory of past integrity will be a true consolation, and assure him, even here on earth, of gleams of light in Heaven. It is dark when the dear voice of that sweet child, once so fondly loved, is no more heard around in murmurs. Dark, when the light, pattering feet no more resound without the threshold, or ascend, step by step, the stairs. Dark, when some well known air recalls the strain once oft attained by the childish voice now hushed in death! Darkness: but only the gloom, which heralds the day-spring of immortality and the infinite light of Heaven.

Three Hints for the Season.

Be sure and cover the bits of your bridles with leather, to prevent the frost from making the mouth of your horse sore; it is down-right cruel to put an iron bit into a horse's mouth on a cold morning. When you cut India rubber, keep the blade of your knife wet, and you can cut it without difficulty.

We have heard of and tested a great many kinds of water-proof blacking for winter boots. Let us tell you what we have tried for two winters, and found to be the best article that we know of. When your boots are stiff, and you think need oiling, wash them in castile soap suds—oil before the leather dries (you may use blackball or any kind of grease); have a saturated solution of gum shellac in alcohol (anybody can make it, as all there is to be done is to dissolve in a pint or half pint of alcohol just as much shellac as the liquid will take up), and apply this solution with a sponge to the oiled boots. In two or three minutes the shellac will dry and harden, and you will have a coating on your boots through which the water cannot by any possibility penetrate. Try it, reader. We have done so often, upon a single upper-leather boot, and, notwithstanding we went in the "slosh" during the whole day, we had perfectly dry feet at night.—Brunswick (Me.) Telegraph.

In the Wrong Box.

An unmarried lady, a perfect specimen of an old maid, being on a visit to a friend who lived in a large manufacturing town, went one Sunday to church alone, and was shown into a large square pew, in which half a dozen females were seated. The prayers were drawing to a conclusion, when the officiating minister deviated from the afternoon service into another with which she was unacquainted. This was a novelty to Miss P., who was in the habit of attending public worship at a fashionable chapel in London. When this interpolated service began her co-powers stood up, she as a matter of course, followed their example, and, on doing so, was surprised to see all the congregation except themselves either sitting or kneeling. Her companions presently knelt down. She again followed their lead, and by paying great attention to the succeeding prayer, she discovered that it was a Thanksgiving for safe delivery from the great pain and peril of childbirth. The usual afternoon service, being over, she rose from her knees with crimsoned cheeks and in an agitated state of mind, which were not lessened by the clerk coming into the pew and asking her: "Have you a child to be christened, Madam?" Pushing him aside, she rushed out of the churching pew, into which she had inadvertently been put, and made the best of her way out of the church. On entering her friend's drawing room she looked so excited and alarmed that Mrs. M. exclaimed: "My dear Charlotte, what has happened?" Has any one popped the question to you?

"Worse than that, much worse," hysterically sobbed the old maid, "I've been 'churched!'"

Novel but Sensible.

A petition has been presented to the British Parliament, praying for a change in the present mode of dividing the day into two divisions of twelve hours each—and in its stead count the hours from one to twenty-four. This would certainly be a very sensible change. At first it might seem rather strange to speak of half-past twenty-three o'clock, but we should soon become accustomed to it, and then the now necessary prefix of A. M. and P. M. could be dropped. In Italy the hours are designated from one to twenty-four.

Women and Children Chewing Tobacco.

A Missouri letter in the Dubuque Times, says tobacco is used among the natives in the rural districts indiscriminately by both sexes—children as well as adults, both for chewing and smoking. A foraging party near Huntsville, recently called at a house where they found a woman and thirteen children, the three eldest being girls, and all "chewing" a "power" of tobacco. One of the party remarking that she was the first woman he ever saw chew tobacco: The old woman exclaimed: "Wal, now, where was you brought up? Never seen a woman chewin'! Guess hasn't been round much.—Don't you have any ladies whar you was raised?"

Closing the Ledger for New Year's Eve

Close up the Ledger, Time,
Slowly and sadly, but let it be.
Mournfully pass by the year;
What are the records for you and me
Left by the falling fingers here?
What for passion, what for love?
What for avarice and crime?
What for hope and the heaven above?
What of the Ledger, Time?

Close up the Ledger, Time.
Many a name, for good or ill,
Fills to the margin your blotted scroll—
Many a high and haughty will,
Many a low and humble soul;
Yet one page to each is given,
Marking the changing path we climb,
Holding the balance of Heaven;
What of the Ledger, Time?

Close up the Ledger, Time?
Say are we creditors for aught?
Have we a store of noble deeds,
Springing from high and nervous thought,
Such as our fallen brothers needs?
Have we laid up for coming years
Words to weave in a funeral rhyme—
Name that will call up grateful tears?
What of the Ledger, Time?

Close up the Ledger, Time.
Say what promises have drawn—
Say what drafts stern truth has paid;
Say what the golden sands have gone
In the grave with memory laid.
Say if the heart has kept its own,
Gathering beauty with love and line,
Say what fabrics are overthrown?
What of the Ledger, Time?

Close up the Ledger, Time?
Hark! the knell of the year goes by;
Have I run out my golden sand?
Where shall I be when the next shall die?
Where shall the soul within me stand?
Naught beyond may the Ledger tell,
Naught be known but in guilt and crime;
Listen! I hear the New Year's bell—
Shut up the Ledger, Time!

In Memory of Lieut. Edward Brackett.
Son of Thos O. and grandson of the late Capt. James Brackett, of this town.

"Shot through the lungs," how he lay, how he lay,
At Antietam, all that fearful day,
Slowly bleeding his life away!
And there comes to us now from the scenes of strife,
Soiled with the camp-dust, with memories rife,
All we have left of the soldier's life.

Only a book with, "This for my friend
When I am done with it," thoughtfully penned,
Long ere the battle. Is this the end?

Is this the end for the voice of song?
For the hand so skillful, and yet so strong—
For the earnest will that bore him along?

I mind me now of his school-boy ways;
"Brave and gentle," and what a brave he was,
And the patient toil of the after days.

Courteous as knight of the times of old,
With a heart as pure and as true as gold,
And his manhood's story all untold.

Yet why our life but to spend it free
As the snow that falls on the earth,
For the Right, for the Truth, for Liberty?

And the brave heart knows, with a quiet content,
That the time is at hand for which it was lent.

But oh! Fatherland that we love so well,
Shall the future's annals of glory tell
It was all in vain that our heroes fell?

We give them up at thy bitter cry,
We say no more when they go to die—
Is it Freedom's dawn that reddens the sky?

Ah, comrade, sleep well in thy soldier's bed
At Antietam, in the fields of our dead,
We know who watcheth overhead.

Memento.

My son, be this thy simple plan:
Serve God, and love thy fellow man;
Forget not in temptation's hour,
That sin sends sorrow double power;
Count life a stage upon thy way,
And follow conscience come what may;
Alike with heaven and earth sincere,
With hand and brow and bosom clear,
"Fear God—and know no other fear."

Anecdotes.

A Scotch pastor recognized one of his female parishioners sitting by the road a little fuddled, and on going to her, she said as he stopped:
Will you just help me up with my bundle, fiddle mon?
Fie, fie, Janet, cried the pastor, to see the like of you in such a plight; do you know where all drunkards go?
Ay, sure, said Janet, they just go whar a drap o' fiddle drink is to be got.

A dying Irishman was asked by his confessor if he was ready to renounce the devil and all his works.
Oh! your honor, said Pat, don't ask me that; I'm going into a strange country, and I don't want to make myself enemies!

What object do you now see? asked the doctor. The young man hesitated for a few moments, and then replied:
It appears like a jackass, doctor, but I rather think it is your shadow.

A young lady, engaged to be married, and getting sick of the bargain, applied to a friend to help her untie the knot before it was too late.
O, certainly, he replied, it's very easy to untie it now, while it's a beau knot.

Francis I., being desirous to raise one of the most learned of the time to the highest dignities of the Church, asked him if he was of noble descent.
Your Majesty, answered the Abbot, there were three brothers in Noah's ark, and I can't tell positively from which of them I am descended.

ANTIETAM.

SOLFERINO and MAGENTA are now by-gones. Antietam is now in the ascendant. And it is the duty of every man, woman and child, to provide the Heroes of Antietam, with a suitable present for Christmas or New Years, that they may know that the loved ones at home have many a kind thought of them, and take this method to show their appreciation of their gallantry and heroism. Below is Abbott's List of suitable presents for our brave soldiers:—

My Mother is Growing Old.

BY A. B. MOORE.

My mother, dear, is growing old,
Her raven locks are fading white,
And death to her will soon unfold
A lovely land of heavenly light.

Alas! she is now bowed with age,
Her trembling form will soon decay;
And death her spirit will uncoil
To dwell in an eternal day.

Old age has dim'd her sparkling eye,
And worn deep furrows on her brow;
Too soon, fond mother, thou wilt die,
For death is stealing on thee now.

My mother, dear, is growing old,
Her fragrant sands will soon be run;
Her fragile form will soon be cold—
Her mortal life will soon be done.

No more she'll walk with youthful pride
The blossoming fields and verdant grove,
Or muse along some lone wood-side,
Or list to Nature's song of love.

Yes, thou art growing old, dear mother,
Thy morning sun too soon will set;
And soon the grave thy form will cover,
And thou the scenes of earth forget.

What thought we part, we'll meet again,
In a better world than this,
Where, free from sorrow, sin and pain,
We hope to dwell in happiness.

Haught in life thy child hath done
To cause one pang, or hope destroy,
With thou forgive, ere death shall come,
With thou forgive this erring boy?

And when thy fleeting life is past,
Which God on earth to thee has given,
Oh, may'st thou find a home at last,
In the "Sainted Courts of Heaven!"

Straps.

COTTAGE CAKE. Two cups of sugar, one tablespoonful of butter, two eggs, half a tea-spoonful of soda, one of cream tartar, one cup of sour milk, three cups of flour; flavor with lemon.

CREAM CUSTARD. Mix a pint of cream with one of milk, five beaten eggs, a table-spoonful of flour and three of sugar. Add nutmeg to the taste, and bake the custards in cups or pie plates in a quick oven.

There is no needier way for a man to bring his own worth into question than by endeavoring to detract from the worth of other men.

Every man must, in a measure, be alone in the world. No heart was ever cast in a same mould as that which we bear within us.

Punch says that poverty must be a woman—it is so fond of pinching a person.

The man who made an impression on the heart of a coquette, has taken out a patent for stone-cutting.

A man speaking of a place out West, says it is a perfect paradise, and that though most all the people have the fever and ague, yet it is a great blessing, for it is the only exercise they take.

It is less pain to learn in youth than to be ignorant in age.

It is easier to die the death of a martyr than to live the life of a saint.

Look not mournfully into the past—it cannot return; wisely improve the present—it is thine; go forth to meet the shadowy future without fear, and with a manly heart.

"Husband, if an honest man is God's noblest work, what is an honest woman?" "His rarest, dear."

To come but once into the world, and trifle away our right use of it, making that a burden, which was given us for a blessing, is a strange infatuation.

The last years of a vicious man are ever miserable. An ill-spent life, like an ill-worn shoe, runs down at the heel.

One unkind or censorious remark very naturally generates another, till aversion is born of aversion, an aversion deep and malignant, in the inverse ratio of the former endearing relations; a law of our being, rendering an unkind act from those from whom we have a right to expect only kind treatment, doubly aggravating.

When there is love in the heart, there are rainbows in the eyes. Yes, and some other kinds of beaus, adds the doctor.

The railing of a cross woman, like the railing of a garden, keeps people at a distance.

Miscellaneous.

For the Patriot.
A Modern Bull Fight.

It was on the 4th of June, 1854, that we had the good or ill luck, to witness that bloody and inhuman spectacle—a Spanish Bull fight. Our ship, the Neva, lay at anchor in the beautiful harbor of Cadiz.—Early in the afternoon we descended her side and rowed ashore. Proceeding then on foot through narrow streets, close walled on either side by the high white houses of the town, we came to the Amphitheatre. This is nothing more nor less than a high circular wall of wood, enclosing a considerable space of ground, within which are an arena, and seats capable of holding eleven thousand persons. As the entertainments are given in the afternoon, about one half of the seats will expose those who occupy them to the glare of the sun—while the rest are in the shade. Consequently the western, or shady side, is the most respectable and the most costly. We took places in the shade, near the entrance, and not far from the part called the Royal Box; which was not, however, on this occasion graced by her Majesty of Spain. Now for a brief description of the show.

At half past four, precisely, the company of performers enter the ring. First come the Matadores, whose office is to kill the bull; then follow the Banderilleros, with their long red cloaks to attract the animal, and deter him from a dangerous pursuit—or rouse him, when he grows sluggish, into fury; and last appear the Picadores, or horsemen—their legs protected by metal greaves, and in their hands long lances, terminating in short, sharp tips of iron. These all, after making the circuit of the arena, take their appointed places; the horsemen stationing themselves at short distances from each other on the left of the gate by which the bull enters. Each horse has his right eye blind-folded, that he may not shy as the bull's approach.

Now sounds the trumpet signal! the bolts are withdrawn—the door of the den flies open, and the bull, goaded from behind, rushes into the arena. His first attack is usually made upon the nearest horseman, who waits with poised lance to receive him. Sometimes he succeeds in repelling him, but more frequently the infuriated animal, dashing his horns into the poor, defenceless horse—either kills him at once, or inflicts a horrible wound. If the horse falls, the rider of course falls with him; and though so encumbered with his heavy armor that he is unable to rise without assistance, he rarely fails to escape without the slightest injury; one or another of the Banderilleros being always at hand to lure the animal from his prostrate foe. There are instances on record, however, where men have been gored to death in the arena.

After a certain interval of time, a larger or smaller number of horses having been dispatched, a signal is given by music, and the Picadores rush forward with short, barbed spears, gaily decorated with ribbons, which they thrust two by two into the bull's neck; dexterously avoiding his horns as they do so. These spears, as they cannot easily be shaken off, serve to heighten the animal's fury.

Next, at another signal, the Matador advances, with his bright red scarf in one hand, and long polished blade in the other, and seizing a favorable moment, when the bull comes plunging towards him, he endeavors to thrust the sword deep into the vital part of the neck, just behind the horns. Sometimes he succeeds at the first trial, and sometimes he is obliged to make repeated attempts. Not seldom it happens that the poor beast, wearied and broken down with fatigue and wounds, cannot be persuaded to advance a step to meet his antagonist; and then he is slaughtered in cold blood where he stands.

Finally, six horses, gorgeously caparisoned, enter to bear away the carcasses from the bloody field. The earth is raked over, fresh sand is strewn; the horsemen are again stationed, and another bull is admitted into the ring.

Cock-fighting, bull-baiting, and the like, are abominable and inhuman spectacles; but this little is to be said in their favor,—there is some show of equality in the contest. But it is quite otherwise with the modern bull-fight. The horses have no chance to defend themselves against the bull; nor can he, in his turn, do aught against this human antagonist; for the red cloth thrown before his eyes continually eludes him, and gives the men time to retreat behind the barricades set up at short distances from each other, all around the ring.

Some of the details of the entertainment are most revolting to one unaccustomed to such sights. Frequently the wretched horses, with their entrails hanging from gaping wounds, are compelled in that condition to bear their riders until they fall dead. And yet many is the bright eye that looks upon the spectacle with intense enjoyment; whilst the male portion of the audience vent their excitement and interest in loud shouts of delight and approval.

On the day of our visit, eight bulls were admitted, and twenty-three horses killed—the second bull making away with nine of them.

Rambles Abroad.

LEAVES FROM A TOURIST'S JOURNAL—NO. I.

To visit Europe is one of the earliest desires of an American scholar. As he reads her eventful history, replete with scenes of thrilling interest, acquires her languages and becomes acquainted with her treasures of literature and science, he has a longing to visit those shores, to wander amid classic scenes and behold the monuments of past achievement and present renown.

From boyhood I had this longing. The attractions of history, art and legendary lore, together with those of natural scenery had ever led me to regard the Old World as a "Land of Promise." At length the day arrived when the desire was to be gratified. The last college exercise was over! Professor Dry-as-dust had finished his last lecture on Constitutional Law! the bell on Harvard Hall had rung its last call to us; the "Prex." had given his farewell salutations, and with an exhalation of heart, more readily imagined than described, we leaped into the first Cambridge "Bus" bound for the city. Then came the bustle of departure. It happened to be on the "Glorious Fourth." Well do I recall the sound of the chiming church bells, the firing of cannon, the cheers of the crowd on the wharf at East Boston, as the noble steamship ran out into the stream. Hardly had Mount Washington, Dorchester Heights, and the Blue Hills of Milton passed from view, when we found ourselves enveloped in a thick fog which did not leave us till far beyond Newfoundland. Apart from a brief visit at Halifax, a stormy nor'wester, and a perilous visit of an iceberg, nothing more worthy occurred during our short voyage of ten days. As we neared the shores of "Merry England," the sailors as usual were allowed to get up some sport for themselves and passengers. The "Donkey ride" was the most ludicrous performance. It was played by three old tars, two of whom crept on all fours, stern to stern, covered with canvas, and carrying a third—a market-man, with his basket of eggs. Now and then his unruly and obstinate beast would give a sudden leap, and very unceremoniously pitch the unfortunate rider off his seat, scattering the contents of the basket all around. Then the fute, the violin, and tambourine were brought out, and the men joined heartily in singing the songs of the sea.

But still pleasanter was that cry forward, "Land ahead!" "Cape Clear," says Captain Lott. "Good, good, we'll be in Liverpool to-morrow," rejoins my fellow traveller, who was thinking of the cosy quarters at the "Waterloo" which awaited our arrival.

The Well, the Altar, and the Tomb.

The most ancient record of man's life on the earth, present us with three chief tokens to make the possession of a portion of its surface as an abiding place of human families: the well of water, the altar of worship, the cave or tomb for the dead. With what an impressive power—the force and beauty of simple truth—does that combination of the well, the altar, and the tomb, affect us. They lead us back upon the tide of ages, and bring us to the habitable spot of earth. The altar, rising above the soil, the well, and the grave beneath it, expresses to us the three great natural wants of man. Life's chief necessity, its divine law, its inevitable issue, are thus present to the eye and to the mind. Amid our ten thousand wants, behold the three which crown them all, and one of these three the body's lonely and everlasting couch.

The well spring gathering its crystal drops from the secret depths of the earth, and receiving them back again when man had used them, and a heavenly distillation had renewed their purity, was a token that near to it grass would grow, and man and beast find sustenance. The crude altar stone, which no tool had touched, was raised upon some overlooking summit; kneeling around it, the patriarchal family called upon themselves the name of God, and thus recognized that everlasting, that universal truth, the basis of all clear thought, knowledge and science, as well as of religion—that this earth, and all its elements and tribes, depend upon the loftier influences of the sky, and owe allegiance to the unseen Centre and Source of power, whence comes forth the energy that controls and blesses. When the mind that has been nourished by food and water, and kept mindful of a divine oversight by the altar, came to its appointed close, there lay a cold and changing body, a forsaken tenement, and the mourner said, "Let me bury my dead out of my sight."

Wells, altars, and graves, the earliest, the universal tokens of man's presence on the earth, the most essential objects of his interest, are also the most enduring of his works. They multiply as the tribes and numbers of our race. They retain the same relation to each other and to human life, and the same proportion, as of old; for men everywhere need them all alike. Where we find things so inseparably related and connected, there is ever a sort of sacred beauty in their union.—Rev. George E. Ellis.

Henry Ward Beecher Loses his Boots.

The following is in Henry Ward Beecher's best vein.

"The difference between 7 and 8 is not very great—only a single unit. And yet that difference has power over a man's whole temper, convenience, and dignity. Thus, at Buffalo, my boots were set out at night to be blocked. In the morning no boots were there, though all the neighboring rooms had been served. I rang. I rang twice. A pretty hotel—nearly eight o'clock, going out at nine, breakfast to be eaten, and no boots. The waiter came, and took my somewhat emphatic order, and left. Every minute was an hour. It always is when you are out of temper. A man in his stocking feet, in the third story of a hotel, finds himself restricted in locomotion. I went to the door, looked up and down the hall, saw frowny chamber maids; saw, afar off, the master of the household; saw a gentleman walking in bright boots, unconscious of the privilege he enjoyed; but did not see any one coming with my boots. A German servant at length came, round and ruddy-faced, very kind and good-natured, honest and stupid. He informed me that a gentleman had already taken boots No. 78 (my number). He would hunt him up; thought he was breakfasting. Here was a new vexation. Who was the man who had taken my number, and gone for my boots? Somebody had them on, warm and nice, and was enjoying his coffee, while I walked up and down, with less and less patience, who had none too much at first. No servant returned. I rang again, and sent energetic and staccato messengers to the office. Some water had been spilled on the floor. I stepped in it, of course. In winter, cold water feels as if it burned you. Unpacked my valise for new stockings. Time was spending. It was a quarter past eight. I slipped on a pair of sandal rubbers, too large by inches for my naked foot; and while I shuffled along the hall, they played up and down on my feet. First, one shot off; that secured, the other dropped on the stairs; people whom I met looked as if they thought I was not well over last night's spree.

"It was very annoying. Reached the office, and expressed my mind. First, the clerk rang the bell three times furiously, then ran forth himself; met the German, who had boots 79 in his hand, narrow and long, thinking, perhaps, I could wear them. Who knows but 79 had my boots? Some curiosity was beginning to be felt among the by-standers. It was likely I should have half the hotel inquiring after my boots. I abhor a scene. Retreated to my room. On the way, thought I would look at 77's boots. Behold, they were mine! There was the broken pair straps, the patch on the right side, and the shape of my toe—infallible signs! The fellow had marked them 77, and not 78. And all this hour's tumult arose from just the difference between 7 and 8.

"I lost my boots, lost the train, lost my temper, and, of course, lost my good manners. Everybody does that loses temper. Put boots on, breakfast served, a cup of coffee brought peace and good-will. The whole matter took a ludicrous aspect. I moralized upon that infirmity that puts a man's peace at the mercy of a Dutchman's chalk. Had been written seventy-eight, I had been a good-natured man, looking at Niagara Falls in its winter dress. He wrote seventy-seven, and I found, saw only my own falls, and spent the day in Buffalo!

"Are not most of the pets and rubs of life as undignified as this? Few men could afford to-morrow to review the things that vexed them yesterday. We boast of being free, yet every man permits the most arrant trifles to rule and ride him. A man that is vexed and angry turns the best part of himself out of sight, and exhibits himself in buffalo's coat and fool's cap, and walks forth to be jeered! And yet one's temper does worse by him than that. And men submit to it, not once, but often, and sometimes every day! I wonder whether these sage reflections will make me patient and quiet the next time my boots are misplaced."

The herb doctors think that to be healthy and vigorous, a man, like a tree, must take root.

The Printer and the Types.

Perhaps there is no department of enterprise whose details are less understood by intelligent people than the art preservative—the achievement of the types.

Every day, their lives long, they are accustomed to read the newspapers, to find fault with their statements, their arrangements, their looks—to plume themselves upon the discovery of some roguish and acrobatic type that gets into a frolic and stands upon its head, or some word with a waste letter or two in it; but of the process by which the newspaper is made, of the myriads of motions and thousands of pieces necessary to composition, they know little and think less.

They imagine they discourse of a wonder indeed, when they speak of the frail white carpet woven for thought to walk upon from the rags that flittered upon the back of the beggar yesterday.

But there is something to us more wonderful still. When we look at the one hundred and fifty-two little boxes that compose a printer's case, noiseless except the clicking of the types, as one by one they take their march in glowing lines—we think we have found the marvel of the art.

Strewn into those little boxes are thin parallelograms of metal, every one good for something, that goes to make up written language; the visible foot-prints of thought upon a carpet of rags.

We think how many fragments of fancy there are in the boxes, how many atoms of poetry and eloquence the printer can make here; and if he only has a small chart to go by, how many facts in small handfuls—how much truth in chaos.

Now he picks the scattered elements until he holds in his hands a stanza of Gray's Elegy, a monody upon Grimes, "cost all buttoned down before." Now he sets up, "Puppy Missing," and now "Paradise Lost." He arranges a bride in "small caps and a sonnet in "Nonpareil." He announces that the languishing live, in one sentence—transposes the word and depletes the days that are 'evil,' in the next.

A poor jest ticks its way into the printer's hand, like a little clock just running down, and a strain of eloquence marches into line. We fancy we can tell the difference by hearing of the ear, but perhaps not. The types that told of a wedding yesterday, announces a burial to-morrow—perhaps in the same letters.

They are the elements to make a world. These types are a world with something in it, as beautiful as spring, as rich as summer, and as autumn flowers that frost cannot wilt—fruit that shall ripen for all time.

Schools.

Read the following excellent suggestions about schools, by the editor of the American Agriculturist.

"The man or woman who drops into the school-house often, and shows an interest in the pupils and in their comfort, is a public benefactor. Both teachers and scholars are encouraged to good behavior and extra efforts. Who does not remember the stimulus to the whole school, of a visit from a parent or other person? A school visited two or three times a week—the visitors insisting that no show or change of programme be made, but that all things go on in regular course, will generally be twice as prosperous as the school never visited. No one should leave others to attend to this matter. The public school should be the pet and pride of every good citizen of the district. Visit it often as a recognized friend, not a morose critic. If the good deeds be sought out and appreciated, an occasional hint for improvement, in a kind tone, will be kindly received and acted upon by both teachers and scholars. Speaking evil or disrespectfully of the teacher in the hearing of your children, or to those who will repeat the words in their presence, inflicts a lasting injury upon them. Get the best teacher possible, and uphold him, or her, so long as employed for the children's sakes. We have known a school deprived of all efficiency, by a thoughtless word about the teacher dropped by a parent in the presence of his child, and repeated by the child to other scholars.

Number of Seeds in a Bushel.

Timothy seed numbers 41,828,360 grains to the bushel, and if sown on an acre of ground, as recommended by some, would give about six and one half to the square inch. Would not one be better than six? Clover, of medium size, what we call Eastern clover, numbers about 17,200,000 to the bushel, and gives about two and three fourths to the square inch on an acre. Rio Grande wheat, fair and plump, numbers about 558,286 to the bushel, and gives about twelve and three fourths to the square foot. Rye numbers 498,880, and gives about twenty and one half to the foot.

Good.

At a party, a haughty young beauty turned to a student who stood near her and said: "Cousin John I understand your eccentric friend L. is here. I have a great curiosity to see him. Do bring him here and introduce him to me."

The student went in search of his friend, and at length found him lounging on a sofa. L. said he, my beautiful cousin Catharine wishes to be introduced to you.

Well, trot her out, John, drawled L., with an affected yawn.

John returned to his Cousin and advised her to defer the introduction to a more favorable time, repeating the answer he had received. The beauty bit her lip, but the next moment said, "Well, never fear! I shall insist on being introduced."

After some delay, L. was led up, and the ceremony of introduction duly performed. Agreeably surprised by the beauty and commanding appearance of Catharine, L. made a profound bow; but instead of returning it she stepped backward, and raising her eyeglass, surveyed him deliberately from head to foot, then waving her hand toward him, drawled out, "Trot him off, John; trot him off—that is enough."

Telegraph Round the World

We have now a telegraphic line from Newfoundland to San Francisco, making a telegraphic communication across the American continent. The Pacific Telegraph Company, it is said, have entered into an arrangement with the Emperor of Russia, by which, conjointly, they will construct a continuous line through British and Russian America, across Behring's Straits, and through Asiatic and European Russia so as to connect St. Petersburg and Washington. This line will be 14,000 miles in length. Russia has already completed 2,500 miles, and collected materials for extending the wire from Siberia to the mouth of the Amoor.

The Human Pulse.

The human pulse in all ages of the world, has been consulted as an index of health or disease. It is a kind of dial within us, which gives us both the measure of time and of health. The pulse of a person in health beats about seventy strokes in a minute, and the ordinary term of human life is about seventy years. In this seventy years, the pulse of a temperate person beats two thousand five hundred and seventy millions, four hundred and forty thousand times. If no actual disorganization should happen, a drunken person might live until his pulse beat this number of times, but by the constant stimulus of ardent spirits, or by pulse quickening food, the pulse becomes greatly accelerated, and the two thousand, five hundred and seventy-five millions, four hundred and forty thousand pulsations are performed in little more than half the ordinary term of human life; life goes out in forty or forty-five years, instead of seventy. This application of numbers is given to show that the acceleration of those forces diminishes the term of human life.—Medical Journal.

Fresh Air.

Breathe fresh air if you would live long. In New England, farmers who pass their days out of doors, live to an average age of 64 years. The average age of persons who have indoor occupations at death is, in Massachusetts and Rhode Island: Shoemakers, 43; tailors, 42 1/2; editors, 41; druggists, jewellers, and teachers, 39 to 40; machinists, 36 1/2; printers, 36 1/2. Fresh air, therefore, almost doubles a man's life, while it more than doubles his capacity for enjoyment.

An Anecdote of Pope.

One day, as Pope, was engaged in translating the "Iliad," he came to a passage which neither he nor his assistant could interpret. A stranger who stood by, in his humble garb, very modestly suggested that, as he had some little acquaintance with Greek, perhaps he could assist them. Try it, try it! said Pope, with the air of a boy who is encouraging a monkey to eat red pepper.

There is an error in the print, said the stranger, looking at the text. Read as if there was no interrogation point at the end of the line, and you have the meaning at once.

Pope's assistant improved upon this hint, and rendered the passage without difficulty. Pope was chagrined; he never could endure to be surpassed in anything. Turning to the stranger, he said in a sarcastic tone: Will you please tell me what an interrogation is?

Why, sir, said the stranger, scanning the ill-shaped poet, it is a little, crooked, contemptible thing that asks questions.

Aid to the Soldiers.

The ladies of this town are preparing to send another box of things to Miss Dawes in Washington, for the relief of sick and wounded soldiers. It is proposed to send the box at an early day, in the coming week, and those who intend to contribute anything are requested to send the same to the rooms of the Sanitary Commission, over Mr. Briesler's store, by Tuesday or Wednesday next.

What use was made of the things which were sent to Washington, in the first box, will appear from the extracts from Miss Dawes' letter to whom it was sent, which we shall publish herewith. Our readers will find a sufficient incentive to give generously, on reading them, we hope. Surely, we ought not to be slow to act or give; if we can possibly ease the pains or soothe the anguish of any brother, friend or neighbor of ours, who lies now on a soldier's couch, suffering from wounds and sickness incurred in the service of his country. Let no one steel his heart to appeals for the soldier—because he may disapprove this war, or because he lays the cause of it to the door of the North. What is that to him—who, by obeying the constituted authorities of the State, has been wounded and disabled? He has done his duty.

You may rest assured that what you give will not be wasted, nor unwisely distributed by the almoner of your bounty; for she knows how and to whom to give, as her unaffected and touching letter will show.

In a letter acknowledging the receipt of the box so kindly sent to her by the ladies of Quincy, Miss Dawes says:

"I have already disposed of most of the things, and all this morning have been at the hospital assisting the women in taking care of the poor men brought in from the late great slaughter, (Fredericksburg), hungry, ragged, and covered with blood. Oh, how glad they were of the crackers—most of which I made into soft milk toast for the poor creatures who are wounded in the head and jaw. I have seen some most heart rending sights, but I will not distress you by entering into details. You can easily imagine that I find full use for every thing that is sent to me—especially for all woolen articles. A great many of the men were lying in exposed situations in the tent-hospitals, outside the city, and at the Convalescent Camp. I have made a great many woolen night caps for them, and would be glad of more. I make them like hawks, to tuck round their ears and necks, and am crocheting gloves and mittens of coarse yarn, for men just leaving their hospitals, for camp use. They are constantly asking me for these things.

"It is not a good plan to pick jellies and wine in the same box with clothing, unless sealed in tin jars. The Expressmen are very careless. I was sorry to lose any of the jelly, for it makes such a refreshing drink for the men who are fortunate enough not to have the prevailing trouble, chronic diarrhoea.

"I have just parted from Ambrose, who has gone to join his Regiment at Fairmount, and must now go to the rooms of the Massachusetts Aid Society to find out if any of our Quincy Boys have been brought in wounded. If you hear of any, you will let me know, and they shall receive my best care.

"And now will you tender my sincere thanks to my Quincy friends, whom I shall always remember affectionately? The sight of their names upon the packages made me not a little home sick."

OUR READERS will notice that we have commenced on the outside a series of articles under the head of "Rambles Abroad," embracing incidents of Foreign Travel. They will be continued from week to week, and we doubt not, they will prove interesting to our readers, as free and easy sketches of what the writer has seen. We do not violate confidence in adding the name of our kind contributor, Rev. Edward P. Thawing.

ROOM FOR IMPROVEMENT. If our Municipal Fathers would mend their ways, it would be a source of gratification to the inhabitants of "Muddy Hollow," and remove a cause of serious complaint. The main thoroughfare through the town, after a heavy rain, is rendered nearly impassable to foot passengers. That part of it, near Cottage Avenue, receives the washings of both ends of the street, with the pressure of a long stretch of low, marshy meadow on the west, which is usually overflowed at this season of the year. We know that considerable labor has been bestowed upon this section of road from time to time—but some important improvements required, we think, have been overlooked. The sidewalks need more elevation—and the sewer of sufficient dimensions to carry off the water as fast as it accumulates, and not allowed to stand in pools, as it now does.

SOCIAL ASSEMBLIES AND MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENTS. The Quincy Brass Band has opened the season by a series of social assemblies which are to come off at Mechanic's Hall, on Thursday evening, of each week. These highly meritorious corps of musicians, come before the public in this way, in an appeal to their fellow citizens, to enable them through their patronage to raise the means to procure a new uniform. Those who would enjoy a pleasant hour, and encourage native talent, have now an opportunity.

FOR THE PATRIOT.

"None but the Brave deserve the Fair."

To the Publisher of the Patriot:—
Cannot dignified young ladies, whose names are shining in the records, go sleighing by themselves, without having their adventures paraded before the public by "pompous" "masculines" of the "Stay-at-home-guards"? The memory of those ungallant bipeds, who witnessed, without extending a helping hand, the departure and downfall of that party, on patriotic deeds intent—will be consigned to a justly merited oblivion; while the heroic deed of that descendant of '76 will be held in life-long remembrance by the fair recipients, as well as by every one who can appreciate a noble daring.

THE DIFFERENCE. The United States government has contracted for twenty thousand barrels of flour at St. Louis, at prices ranging from $4.60 to $5.14 per barrel. The bogus Confederacy government have a standing contract with the Richmond mills for the same article at $20 per barrel, payable in "scrip," redeemable two years after the close of the war.

HORSE RAILROAD.—TIME ALTFRED.—On and after Monday next, there will be an alteration in the time of running the cars.—The changes will be noticed in our next.

GREAT BARGAINS IN DRY GOODS. Now is your time to buy Dry Goods—Packard is on the move—and in brushing up for the New Year, he is selling off his stock at an unprecedented low figure. His stock of Unprecedented Goods is said cannot be surpassed, which purchasers are invited to call and examine. His advertisement appears in our columns today. Call early, at the old Dry Goods Emporium, of Caleb Packard, corner of Granite and Hancock streets, and secure a bargain.

FARMER'S ALMANAC. We have received through the politeness of Mr. Gill, the Farmer's Almanac for 1863. No better work of its kind is published. Its calendar pages are made up with great care—are always found reliable—and its other reading matter is of general interest. For sale at the Quincy bookstore.

SUNDAY SERVICES. Rev. J. H. Means, of Dorchester, is expected to preach at the Orthodox church to-morrow.

The Pastor, commences a course of Sabbath afternoon Lectures to young men, a week from to-morrow. Subject of the first discourse: "Signs of the Times."

TAKE NOTICE. A Free Lunch at the Mariposa Saloon this evening.

For the Patriot.

Levee of the Ladies' Aid Association.

It seems to us to merit somewhat more than a passing notice, when ladies consent to leave their wonted retirement, and appear before a general public, for their country's good. All honor to every lady who lent her valuable aid last week to the entertainment for the relief of our suffering soldiers. It is seldom that we have the opportunity of witnessing more delightful performances than those gotten up under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Association of this town. Beauty, taste, and a keen sense of the ridiculous, combined to render all the Tableaux good, and some of them surpassingly fine. We never, for instance, saw anything better of their kind than the "Street-scene," "The Reception," and "Army and Navy." But where all were so excellent, it is hardly fair to particularize. Let us only add that we doubt not that any one of the "Raw Recruits" might make a small fortune by exhibiting himself for an hour or two every day; fully armed and equipped, on the Town House steps.

We have mentioned only those of the Tableaux that came first to our remembrance—others occur to us, equally attractive, which those who saw them can readily recall. We pity those unfortunate who saw them.

And what shall we say of the little Comedy, "The Hoyden," and the Charade, "Mad-cap?" Well put upon the stage, and skillfully acted. They formed a prominent and most pleasing part of the entertainment. We trust that our newly discovered actors and actresses will not be tempted to leave us to tread prouder boards. We trust, also, that they may be induced to afford us again the enjoyment, and our poor soldiers the benefit of their talents.

On the never-to-be-forgotten occasion of which we write, Mr. Baumbach, the well-known organist, and our own sweet songstress, Miss Bartlett, kindly lent their gratuitous services. Certain ladies also, whose names we need not mention, played and sang for the additional gratification of the audience.

The refreshment-table—well provided and arranged, was generously patronized.

The whole affair was under the efficient management of Mr. Putnam, of the High School.

We would remark, in conclusion, that if a few persons could be found who would be willing, for our soldiers' sake, to devote a few weeks to the preparation of Tableaux and Plays, we doubt not that they might perform successfully before our towns-people for several nights, and reap an abundant harvest.

18TH REGIMENT, CO. K. We learn from Capt. B. F. Meservy, that out of one hundred able bodied men, that started with him for the Seat of War, there are but nineteen left in the Company, fit for duty at the present time.

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN. No one who has a taste for such reading, should be without this work. Here they will learn the progress that is being made in the mechanic arts. The new inventions which are being brought out, and from an association of ideas, collected from its constant reading, a latent spark may be revived, which some might think they did not possess, that might lead them to become inventors themselves. It is got up in the best style of the art, and is every way worthy the attention of our mechanics. For details, see their advertisement in another column of our paper to-day.

Packages by Mail.

IMPORTANT TO THE PUBLIC.

Post Office Department, }
Appointment Office, Washington Jan. 3. }
Many Postmasters persist in sending through the mails packages of clothing, boots, &c., charging thereon only one cent an ounce for postage. This is a palpable violation of the laws and regulations with which every Postmaster should be familiar. The packages are held for the legal postage at the distributing offices or office of delivery, and are accumulated to such an extent as to be greatly annoying to these offices, and in a large majority of cases never reach the parties addressed, thus causing a loss to the parties sending. The laws and regulations clearly define what is allowable matter, and prescribe what amount of postage is to be charged thereon, and further provides that all other matter of thing, if sent by mail, is subject to letter postage. To prevent further loss to parties interested and the improper interruption of business at the large offices, all Postmasters are required to make themselves fully acquainted with the laws and regulations relating to the postal service, and the mailing of packages hereafter, of the character referred to, by any Postmaster, without the proper postage being prepaid by postage stamps, will be considered good cause for removal.

ILLUSTRATED Scientific American.

The Best Mechanical Paper in the World!
EIGHTEENTH YEAR.
VOLUME VIII—NEW SERIES.

A NEW Volume of this popular Journal commenced on the first of January. It is published WEEKLY, and every number contains sixteen pages of useful information, and from five to ten original engravings of new inventions and discoveries, all of which are prepared expressly for its columns.

To the Mechanic and Manufacturer.
No person engaged in any of the mechanical or manufacturing pursuits should think of "doing without" the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN. It costs but six cents per week; every number contains from six to ten engravings of new machines and inventions, which can not be found in any other publication.

To the Inventor.
The SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is indispensable to every inventor, as it not only contains illustrated descriptions of nearly all the best inventions as they come out, but each number contains an Official List of the Claims of all the Patents issued from the United States Patent Office during the week previous; thus giving a correct history of the progress of inventions in this country. We are also receiving, every week, the best scientific journals of Great Britain, France, and Germany; thus placing in our possession all that is transpiring in mechanical science and art in these old countries. We shall continue to transfer to our columns copious extracts from these journals of whatever we may deem of interest to our readers.

A pamphlet of instruction as to the best mode of obtaining Letters Patent on new inventions, is furnished free on application.
Messrs. MUNN & Co. have acted as Patent Solicitors for more than twenty years, in connection with the publication of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, and they refer to 20,000 patentees for whom they have done business. No charge is made for examining sketches and models of new inventions and for advising inventors as to their patentability.

Chemists, Architects, Millwrights and Farmers.
The SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN will be found a most useful journal to them. All the new inventions in the science of chemistry are given in its columns, and the interests of the architect and carpenter are not overlooked; all the new inventions and discoveries pertaining to these pursuits being published from week to week. Useful information pertaining to the interests of millwrights and mill-owners will be found in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, which information they can not possibly obtain from any other source. Subjects in which farmers are interested will be found discussed in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN; most of the improvements in agricultural implements being illustrated in its columns.

TERMS.—To mail subscribers: Three Dollars a year, or One Dollar for four months. The volumes commence on the first of January and July. Specimen copies will be sent gratis to any part of the country.

Western and Canadian money or Post-office stamps taken at par for subscriptions. Canadian subscribers will please to remit twenty-five cents extra on each year's subscription to prepay postage.

To Horse Owners.
DR. SWEET'S INFALLIBLE LINIMENT
For Horses is unrivaled by any, in and all cases of Lameness, arising from Sprains, Bruises or Wrenching, it is truly magical and certain.
Harness or Saddle Galls, Scratches, Mange, &c., it will also cure speedily. Sprain and Rigglebone may be easily prevented and cured in their incipient stages, but confirmed cases are beyond the possibility of a radical cure. No case of the kind, however, is so desperate or hopeless that it may be alleviated by this Liniment, and its faithful application will always remove the Lameness, and enable the horse to travel with comparative ease.
Every horse owner should have this remedy at hand, for its timely use at the first appearance of Lameness will effectually prevent those formidable diseases mentioned, to which all horses are liable, and which render so many otherwise valuable horses nearly worthless.

Poetry.

A Song for the New Year.

Hark! The Old Year is gone!
And the young New Year is coming!
Through minutes, and days, and unknown skies,
My soul on her forward journey flies;
Over the regions of rain and snow;
And beyond where the wild March-trumpets Blow.

And I see the meadows all cowslip-strown;
And I dream of the dove in the greenwood lone;
And the wild bee humming;
And all because the New Year is coming!

The winter is cold, the winter is gray,
But he has not a sound on his tongue to-day:
The son of the stormy autumn, he Tollers about on the paled knee,
With a frozen heart and a feeble head:
Let us pierce a barrel and drink him dead!
The fresh New Year is almost here;
Let us warm him with mistletoe boughs, my dear!
Let us welcome him hither, with songs and wine,
Who holdeth such joys in his arms divine!

What is the past to you or to me,
But a thing that was, and was to be?
And now it is gone to a world unknown;
Its deeds are done; its flight is flown!

Hark to the past! In a better tone,
It creeth: The good Old Year is flown,
The sire of a thousand thoughtful hours,
Of a thousand songs, of a thousand flowers!
Ah! who, thou ungrateful child of rhyme,
Rail'st thou at the deeds of our father Time?
Hath he not fed thee, day by day,
With fancies that soothe thy soul away?
Hath he not wakened, with pleasant pain,
The muse that slept in thy teeming brain?
Hath he not—ah! dost thou forget
All the amount of the mighty debt!

... In the meantime,— speak, trump and drum!
The year is gone! the year is come!
The fresh New Year, the bright New Year,
That telleth of hope and joy, my dear!
Let us model our spirit to chance and change,
Let us lesson our spirit to hope, and range
Through pleasures to come,—through years unknown;
But never forget the time that's flown!

For the Patriot.

We'll try.

BY F. M. ADELINGTON—WEYMOUTH.

We can ne'er beat the South; we can't do it—
oh, no!
We never can conquer so valiant a foe!
But from whom does this cowardly sentiment come?
From the traitors in camp and the traitors at home.
But we'll give to these white-liver'd cravens the
lie,
By that brave little pass word of freedom, We'll try.

They have boasted, one Southern was equal to three
Of the best of our Yankees by land or by sea.
But as boasting's their nature, we heed not their brag;
And let history tell who best honor their flag.
It is said that slaveholders will fight to the last;
That their rattlesnake colors are nail'd to the mast;
That is well—when the battle is ended, there'll be
Not a slaveholder left, and our land will be free.
It is said that we never can conquer the South.
That they've press'd in their service both old men and youth,
But should they be outnumber'd their colors
they'll pitch,
And defend to the last in the very last ditch.
That is well, too—that ditch some hard digging
will save,
Where the last of the traitors will find their own grave.
There is one thing the Southerners are slow to discern,
But however unwilling, they'll yet have to learn.
That the spirit of Freedom will never give o'er,
Until Liberty reigns on America's shore.
All this land shall be Freedom's; the traitors may go
To the d—l if they will—they have long been in company;
For on earth there's no country, where Justice
is known,
That will welcome the knaves who are false to their own.

Some wag took a drunken fellow, placed him in a coffin with the lid so that he could raise it, placed it in a graveyard, and waited to see the effect. After a short time the fumes of the liquor left him, and his position being rather confined, he sat upright, and after looking around, exclaimed:
"Well, I'm the first that's ris, or else I'm confoundedly belated."

Little Willie having hurtled in all the corners for his shoes, at last appears to give them up, and climbing upon a chair, bestows himself to a big book lying on a side table.
Mother says to him:
"What is that darling doing with the book?"
"It's the dictionary. Papa looketh in the dictionary for things, and I'm looking to see if I can find my shoes."

A little boy in a railroad car seeing a man with an uncommon supply of hair on his face and lips, exclaimed:
"Oh, mother, see that man with a cat in his mouth!"

ANTIETAM.

SOLFERINO and Magenta are now bygones. Antietam is now in the ascendant. And it is the duty of every man, woman and child, to provide the Heroes of Antietam, with a suitable present for Christmas or New Year, that they may know that the loved ones at home have many a kind thought of them, and take this method to show their appreciation of their gallantry and heroism. Below is Abbott's List of suitable presents for our brave soldiers—

The Soldier's Portfolio—proof against all weather—sentences with articles for soldier's use. A unique thing—weighs only 10 ounces. Call and see it.

Also, an excellent assortment of Vermont
Knit Hose—just the thing.

Also, those Patent Knife, Fork and Spoon combined. Just what every brave boy in the field needs.

Also, that excellent Healing Plaster, the

I had was all grey, and falling out very fast, until I used I should have said, I commenced using your Hair Restorative, and it immediately stopped
the hair falling out, and soon restored the color,

same color it was in early manhood. I take great pleasure in recommending your excellent
